NEWSPAPERS ENTITLED TO VIEWS

A. L. Brooks, of the defense counsel in the W. R. Cole case, doesn't like it because the newspapers have criticized the jury for freeing Cole.

That is often the case with some lawyers and many other people, too. But in practically every case a lawyer sees only his side of the case insofar as the guilt or innocence of the defendant is concerned.

The newspapers of the State have been practically unanimous in their disapproval of the verdict in the Cole case, and it seems to us that they have a right to assume that attitude.

There was no evidence of self-defense in the case at all, despite anything the Greensboro lawyer says. No insane person could remember details as given to the jury by Cole.

In charging the jury in the Willis case in Durham this week Judge Grady declared that there is no such thing in North Carolina as the "unwritten law." The phraseology is a little confusing.

The newspapers have denounced the verdict for one reason principally—because they do not want to see the law broken down in North Carolina and when we permit men of influence to kill in cold blood and then come forward with pleas supported wholly by an unwritten law, we are getting on dangerous ground.

STILL AFTER DR. POTEAT

When the Baptists of the State meet in Charlotte on November 17, 18 and 19 an effort will be made to oust Dr. W. L. Poteat, president of Wake Forest College. This fact was made known recently when announcement was made that "Barrett resolutions" asking for a change in the manner of electing trustees of the college would be presented to the convention.

Dr. Poteat is in bad grace with many Baptists because of his views on evolution. He has stirred up discord in his church in the State, it is said, and recently his influence has spread to the entire South, causing a division of opinion in the entire Southern Baptist Church.

set trustees entirely in the hands of the State convention. Proponents of the resolutions think they can defeat trustees favorable to Dr. Poteat if the voting takes place during the convention.

The Baptists may succeed in putting Dr. Poteat out as President of Wake Forest College but they, and not he, will be the biggest loser. The clean, upright, honorable life of Dr. Poteat is one of the best examples we know of the oft repeated declaration that a man can believe in evolution and be a Christian.

Vice President Dawes went to Atlanta in his campaign to change some of the Senate rules. He was heard by a big crowd there, it was said in newspaper dispatches and the audience indicated that it was with him in his efforts to limit debate in the upper house of Congress.

The girl took no offense; she maintained her curious observation of him; she appeared genuinely interested in acquainting herself with a man who could master such a phenomenal quantity of liquor. There was mystification in her tone when she said: "But—I saw you come in alone. And now you're drinking alone."

"Is that a reproach? I beg your pardon," Pierce answered with a mocking bow. "What will you have?" Without removing her chin from its resting-place, the stranger shook her head slowly, so he downed his beverage as before. The girl watched him interestedly as he paid for it.

"That's more money than I've seen in a month," said she. "I wouldn't be so free and easy with it, if I were you." "Not? Why not?" She merely shrugged, and continued to study him without a disconcerting intention—she reminded him of a frank and curious child.

Pierce noticed now that she was a very pretty girl, and quite appropriately dressed, under the circumstances. She wore a boy's suit, with a short skirt over her knickerbockers, and since she was slim, the garments added to her appearance of immaturity. Her face was oval in outline, and it was of a perfectly uniform olive tint; her eyes were large and black and velvety, their lashes were long, their lids were faintly smudged with a shadowy under-coloring that magnified their size and intensified their brilliance.

Her hair was almost black, nevertheless it was of fine texture; a few unruly strands had escaped from beneath her fur cap and they clung to her brow and temples. At first sight she appeared to be foreign, and of that smoky type commonly associated with the Russian idea of beauty, but she was not foreign, not Russian; nor were her features predominantly racial.

"What's your name?" she asked, suddenly. "Pierce told her. 'And yours?' he inquired. 'Laure.' 'Laure what?' 'Just Laure—for the present.' 'Humph! You're one of this—theatrical company, I presume?' He indicated the singers across the room.

"Yes, Morris Best hired us to work in his place at Dawson." "I remember your outfit—Sheep Camp. Best was nearly crazy." "He's crazier now than ever," Laure smiled for the first time and her face lit up with mischief. "Poor Morris! We lead him around by his big nose. He's deathly afraid he'll lose us, and we know it, so we make his life miserable." She turned serious abruptly, and with a cadaverous start said: "I like you."

"Indeed?" Pierce was nonplussed. "The girl nodded. 'You looked good to me when you came in. Are you going to Dawson?' 'Of course, Everybody's going to Dawson.' 'I suppose you have partners?' 'No! Pierce's face darkened. 'I'm alone—very much alone.' He undertook to speak in a hollow, hopeless tone.

"Big outfit?" "None at all. But I have enough money for my needs and—I'll probably hook up with somebody." Now there was a brave but cheerless resignation in his words. Laure pondered for a moment; even more carefully than before she studied her companion. That the result satisfied her she made plain by saying: "Morris wants men. I can get him to hire you. Would you want to hook up with us?"

"I don't know. It doesn't much matter. Will you have something to drink now?" "Why should I? They don't give my percentage here. Wait! I'll see Morris and tell you what he says." Leaving Pierce, the speaker hurried to a harassed little man of Hebrew countenance who was engaged in the difficult task of chaperoning this unruly aggregation of talent. To him she said: "I've found a man for you, Morris."

"To go to Dawson with us. That tall, good-looking fellow at the bar." Mr. Best was bewildered. "What his you?" he queried. "I don't want any men, and you know it." "You want this fellow, and you're going to hire him."

CHAPTER XIV With "Poleon" Doret he was busy to be contented, and these were busy times for him. His daily routine, with trap and gun, had made of him an early riser and had bred in him a habit of greeting the sun with a song. It was no hardship for him, therefore, to cook his breakfast by candle-light, especially now that the days were growing short. On the morning after his rescue of Sam Kirby and his daughter, "Poleon" washed his dishes and cut his wood, then, finding that there was still an hour to spare before the light would be sufficient to run Miles Canon, he lit his pipe and strolled up to the village. The ground was now white, for considerable snow had fallen during the night; the day promised to be extremely short and uncomfortable. "Poleon, however, was impervious to weather of any sort; his good humor was not dampened in the least.

The fellow held the girl for an instant and helped her to regain her equilibrium, exclaiming, with a laugh: "Say! What's the matter with you, sister? Can't you see where you're going?" When Rouletta made no response the man continued in an even friendlier tone. "Well, I can see; my eyesight's good, and it tells me you're about the best-looking dame I've run into tonight." Still laughing, he bent his head as if to catch the girl's answer. "Eh? I don't get you. Who d'you say you're looking for?"

"Poleon was frankly puzzled. He resented this man's tone of easy familiarity, and about to interfere, he was restrained by Rouletta's apparent indifference. What allied the girl? It was too dark to make out her face, but her voice, oddly changed and unnatural, gave him a certain wonderment. Could it be—Poleon's half-formed question was answered by the stranger, who cried, in mock reproach: "Nanghty! Nanghty! You've had a little too much, that's what's the matter with you. Why, you need a guardeeen." Taking Rouletta by the shoulders, the speaker turned her about so that the dim half-light that filtered through the canvas wall of the tent saloon shone full upon her face.

NO EVOLUTION IN SCHOOLS WANTED

Presbyterian Synod Adjourns to Meet in Statesville Next Year. Mooresville, Oct. 16.—Separation of church and state as a cardinal principle of government was called for in resolutions adopted by the Presbyterian synod of North Carolina at its closing session here today.

The resolutions were brought in by a committee of which the Rev. J. B. Bridges, D. D., editor of the Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, was chairman. There was considerable discussion but the adoption was almost unanimous. Only five voices were raised in opposition. The resolutions were framed by Rev. Dr. A. R. Shaw, of Charlotte, with slight amendment were adopted.

The committee was appointed to consider "the whole subject touching in the secular schools and institutions of the state certain things recognized as contrary to their faith." The resolutions reaffirmed the position taken by the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church at its last session. They urged "closer supervision to prevent teaching anything contradictory to Christian truth as revealed in the word of God" and also that any teacher "inculcating theories which tend to destroy the faith of our young men and women in the Old and New Testament as the inspired word of God" be promptly removed from his or her position.

The position of the synod is that if articles of Christian faith are not taught in the public schools, then separation of church and state should be maintained. The resolutions also stated that any teacher "inculcating theories which tend to destroy the faith of our young men and women in the Old and New Testament as the inspired word of God" be promptly removed from his or her position.

Three clerks were elected at the session today. Rev. R. A. McLeod, of Fayetteville, was elected stated clerk, succeeding the Rev. D. I. Craig, D. D. Rev. A. F. Barnes, of Concord, was elected recording clerk, and Rev. J. G. Garth, of the Mckenzieburg Presbytery, was elected permanent clerk.

Two carloads of cinders from Montana are being used in surfacing the new track at the University of California, which is expected to be on of the fastest on the Pacific coast.

"ACHED & AGED"

Lady Says Her Back "Hurt Night and Day"—Least Noise Upset Her. Better After Taking Cardui.

Winfield, Texas.—"My back hurt night and day," says Mrs. C. L. Eason, of R. F. D. 1, this place. "I ached and ached until I could hardly go. I felt weak and did not feel like doing anything. My work was a great burden to me. I just hated to do up the dishes, even. I was no-account and extremely nervous."

"My mother had taken Cardui and she thought it would do me good, so she told me to take it. My husband got me a bottle and I began on it. I began to improve at once. It was such a help that I continued it until after the baby's birth.

"I took eight bottles and I can certainly say that it helped me. It is a fine tonic. It built me up and seemed to strengthen me. I grew less nervous and began to sleep better.

"I can certainly recommend Cardui to expectant mothers, for to me it was a wonderful help. In every way I felt better after taking it and I think it is a splendid medicine."

Cardui is purely vegetable, and contains no harmful drugs. For sale everywhere. NO-162
