BUSINESS AND THE OUTLOOK

Philadelphia Record.
The statements put out by the Cleveland Trust Company from time to time, written by Colonel Leonard P. Ayres, its vice president, have gained a place of decided importance in the financial world. He is inclined to the view that the bull market in stocks, underway for nearly two years, has about run its course, and he expects its culmination before long. As to business conditions, he says that the prospects are that they will continue favorable "during the rest of the year and well into 1926, because fundamental factors are still in generally good balance and promise to remain so for some time to come. Trade, commerce and industry are confidently looking forward to active business during the autumn and to an exceptionally good holiday season for retail sales."

During the past week an outstanding development was the opinion handed down by Judge Moncure, in the Chancery Court, at Richmond, Va., denying the application of the minority stockholders of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad for an injunction to restrain the leasing of that system to the Nickel Plate. The court held substantially that the majority stockholders were clothed with the authority to lease the road to another company and that jurisdiction in the field of the railroad merger lies not with State courts, but with the Interstate Commerce Commission as the agent of Congress.

Dun's Review gives this summary: "It does not now require close examination of reports to detect evidence of progress, for there is a steadily widening circle of improvement that is embracing nearly all lines. Because of the prominent position of the steel industry, the substantial increase in the unfulfilled tonnage of the principal producer has occasioned much favorable comment, and it has been supplemented by a further rise in output and by more definite signs of stronger markets. The metal trades generally have been doing better, with zinc prices at the highest level of the year; New England shoe factories are booking more contracts; colder weather has given a new stimulus to retail sales of dry goods and clothing; and in various commercial channels frequent purchases by dealers are necessitated by the enlarging demands from consumers."

Iron and steel production shows a slight increase over the previous week. It now stands at about 75 per cent of capacity, with some mills exceeding that rate considerably. The pig iron market is slightly more active. A disposition appears on the part of some steel buyers to replenish stocks, which have been at low levels in the past few months. In certain lines, as in tinplate, prices have been marked up, but in most instances customers are booked up at old prices before the advances become effective.

The cotton market is still under the influence of the government cotton crop estimate jux, which apparently has aroused dissatisfaction in all quarters. In spite of the Washington figures of 14,759,000 bales, the actual crop is far from being determined, yet heavy gains indicate a large crop, and the first damage this year seems to be minimized by the yield of the crop.

For the past week prices for cotton were firmer, although it was said that most of the traders leaned toward the bear side. Wool prices also were firmer on mill demand, yet Dr. Lewis H. Haney, director of the New York University School of Business Research, expresses the view that present raw wool prices are not likely to hold out. The movement in textiles has been large, with production curtailed only in the southern mills, where drought continues. Waxed jobbers in men's goods agree that both fall and spring order have mounted to a point beyond their greatest expectations.

Following Monday's holiday Chicago wheat prices broke in sympathy with foreign advices and a three-cent drop in Winnipeg. During the remainder of the week price variations were comparatively narrow. The week-end transactions, however, showed gains, with December options in May and that of cents higher than they are at the close.

FOOTBALLISTS TURN TO ALL-STATE TEAMS

Local Fans Are Already Busy Trying to Decide Who Gets a Call to the Mythical Eleven.
Now that the football season is well underway and there are pretty good indications about who's who and why on the various and sundry teams, the red-hot fans are casting about to know when they may place on the all-state selections.

They admit that it is pretty early to choose the personnel of the mythical eleven, but at the same time they are getting quite a kick out of advancing their favorites and arguing the matter among themselves.

The press agents, that very valuable part of every educational institution, insert now and then the name of some player on whom they are banking to get a mention. Carolina's scribe wins the cake along this line, having already placed George Robinson as an all-southern prospect. At any rate, this Carolina writer has given the many who essay to name "best eleven" each year something to think about. The early bird is the one who catches the worm. He should send marked copies of the papers carrying his story to Atlanta, where the sport writers each year select all-southern teams from the University of Georgia and Georgia Tech. Gibson's Drug Store is easily the leader as the center of local football thought. Nightly, close observers of the game gather there and converse at length on past achievements of their teams and on future hopes. On Saturday night, there is a throng, with all the tired attendants at the games back to report on what they saw for the edification of the ones who didn't get to go.

Discussions recently at this firm have turned to the matter of an all-state eleven. There has been great accord in most of the men named. For instance, Greason and Rackley, Wake Forest luminaries, have been voted choice backfield-positions ahead of any other players in the state. As certainities in the line of this all-state team, there loom Robinson and McIver, of Carolina, and Emerson, of Wake Forest, and Harry Vance, of Davidson. These four men are just bound to be on any team, it was decided. Grigg, Duke tackle, was thought by many to deserve a place in the line.

At ends, there came about a hopeless division. There are just no outstanding ends in the state. After debate, the matter of these positions was laid to rest for the time being, awaiting something spectacular from a wing.

In addition to Greason and Rackley in the backfield, it was thought that Underwood's recent work for Carolina entitled him to a place. As for the fourth man, there was some
