

No New Developments In The P. & N. Case

Efforts to Reach Settlement So Line Can Come by This City Are Still Being Made.

LAND VALUES ARE TOO HIGH

Those Close to P. & N. Officials Declare Prices Asked In This County Will Be Refused.

No new developments were reported today in the negotiations looking to a settlement of differences between officials of the Piedmont & Northern Railway and Cabarrus land owners over right of ways for the interurban.

Under the caption, "Right of Way Hold Ups," The Charlotte Observer discusses the case editorially as follows: "The people of Concord are considerably disturbed over development that the town may lose the Piedmont & Northern because of the hold-up attitude assumed by some land-owners through whose properties the line was intended to run."

Another thing that may as well be understood is that the interurban people are not among the classification of bluffers. They do not haggle to bring down prices. The owners set the price at which they will surrender the right of way; if the price is too stiff, a request is made for reduction to negotiable figures.
