The French debt commission came,

The French debt commission came, discussed, went away. They got what they wanted, which is an extension of time. It came under the guise of a settlement. The United States ingotiators who would not think of accepting twenty-five millions as a decent payment, accepted forty milions, which is a slight fifteen millions more, and of inconsiderable moment in the whole transaction. Judgine the occasion in terms of victory and defeat, the American negotiators met defeat. It may be just as well; any persistence on our part would have disclosed to the world the real condition of France, which is little short of, desperate. An understanding is abour all that could be expected under the circumstances, and the proposed payments are gestures, a trifle more substantial than promises. About the conduct of the negotiation, the least said, et cetera. It started out like a long-distance poker game played through the newspapers, Rluff was put up to expose bluff. Both

Monthly Review, released for publication in today's papers.

In this southern piedmont section, however, says the bank publication, the drought of the summer has continued, the occasional rains that have fallen being insufficient to relieve the situation.

"In other sections," it says, "rain has put the soil in shape for plowing and seeding, and farm work for winter crops is not expected to be much later than usual. The coastal farmers report ideal weather for harvesting. A good crop of corn is in prospect, and yields are fair in spite of the drought, in some cases being much better than had been expected

"Hay yields," continues the Review, "are very poor. Hays that should have matured during the summer were practically a failure, but late hay recops have been much improved by recent rains. Yields from cultivated hay crops have been much improved by recent rains. Yields from cultivated hay crops will barely average half of last year's yield.
