THE NEXT COTTON ESTIMATE REPORT.

The government on Tuesday will issue its last cotton forecast for the present crop and immediate prices will be governed in a large measure by the report.

While some cotton growers contend that cotton this year could not be raised for 19 1/2 cents per pound, there are others who feel that they are making a fair profit when the staple sells for that price.

It is predicted now by one local cotton buyer who has been to all sections of the county and who buys thousands of bales on the local market each year, that the 1925 crop will be as large as the 1924 crop.

Local mills are using all the cotton they can. They are running every available hour with prospects of good business in 1926. It is generally believed that the present crop will not exceed the demand very much if any.

BANKERS SEE PROSPERITY IN THE STATE.

Several hundred investment bankers from all sections of the country passed through North Carolina Saturday, fortunately for themselves and the State, making the trip through Tarheel in the daytime.

The bankers stopped in Charlotte for a short time and there newspaper men talked with a number of them. The bankers had seen many evidences of prosperity in the State and they predicted great things for the future.

These bankers went on to their convention in Florida and from there they will return to homes throughout the nation. They are going to talk North Carolina for they have recognized in the State the most progressive commonwealth in the Southern States and one of the most progressive in the country.

TODAY'S EVENTS.

Monday, December 7, 1925.
The Sixty-ninth Congress of the United States assembles at noon today.

Calvin Coolidge as a Vermont farmer will sound the keynote at the opening in Chicago today of the seventh annual convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

The Mosul question and more than fifty other items are on the agenda of the session of the council of the League of Nations which has been called to meet today at Geneva.

The first Southeastern National Radio Exposition is scheduled to open in Atlanta today and will be continued through the remainder of the week.

The one hundredth anniversary of the founding of America's rubber industry is to be celebrated today with a meeting and dinner under the auspices of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

International problems of particular importance to the people of the Pacific Coast will be discussed at the midyear meeting of the Western Division of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, opening today at Seattle.

Conservationists from all parts of the United States and representatives of the Canadian and Mexican Governments are expected to attend the twelfth National Game Conference, which meets in New York City today for a two-day session.

An anti-daylight saving measure, prohibiting any municipality from using other than Eastern Standard Time is to be submitted to the voters of Maine for acceptance or rejection at the referendum election to be held in that State today.

The Most Beautiful University. Charlotte Observer.

Another claim is to be made for Duke University other than "the richest in the nation." It is going to be "the prettiest." The Chronicle, paper published by the students here, this week gives information on the progress of construction work, one item of which is "thirty-seven buildings" in the main group on top of the plateau; the other is a campus of 4,000 acres of virgin forest of great natural beauty, which is to be improved by the landscape artist.

Landscape plans are now under revision and beautifying this great campus will begin. There will be many lakes and a golf course, and while the campus can be shaped up in a short time, completion of the building scheme will be a matter of five years. About that time, Duke University will be the talk of the country.

"Dear Editor—What is capital punishment?"
Answer—When I went to school it was making a bad boy kiss a pretty girl.

swung suddenly to the left into the Mineola road. Whether Lacy could not make the turn or whether he did not want to was not clear. The Isotta wavered for a fraction of a second and then went thundering up the Roslyn hill toward New York.

There were only a few cars ahead of them, and Lacy worked up quickly behind the green Packard. The moon was full. It was one of those rare nights which make June so popular for weddings and outdoor drinking.

Pooch leaned forward. "Here is th' jack," he said. "I didn't want t' give it to you on th' ferry. Never c'n tell who's nosin' round. I want t' get shook of it, though. I'll give it you, sis. You c'n stockin' it fer th' boss here. He's workin' now. Count it. There's fifty grand there. Thank God, that's gone!"

A thick roll of bills bound with an elastic band was placed in Sister Connemara's hand as they lurched around a curve with the speedometer wavering around forty-five.

Mechanically she leaned forward to the dashboard light, removed the strap, and counted the money. Fifty grand new, fluttering thousand-dollar notes! Rolling them up, she hesitated a moment and then with sudden determination tucked them inside the voluminous folds of her nun's habit.

"I think there's been an accident," Connemara was moved to exclaim.

Pooch again: "That damn Pierce's comin' up. Drive up to the Packard and I'll tell 'em t' take her out of second. That bunch ought to be hackin' for some funeral parlor."

The big Isotta leaped ahead with a warning croak—from the horn. Trees, fences, hedges, softly lit houses flashed past in crazy panorama. Rounding a corner on the wrong side of the road, they left a Ford sedan stranded in the ditch.

Gradually they drew up to the Packard. Pooch cupped his hands and shouted, but the wind tore his words away. The Packard driver seemed to understand, however, for he increased his speed and took the lead once more.

Through the deserted streets of Glen Cove tore the two racing cars. A sleepy policeman leaning against the bank at the four corners roused himself sufficiently to stagger to the curb and open his mouth several times after the retreating tail lights.

On past the Engineers, through Sea Cliff and up the winding hill flanking Roslyn Harbor. They were approaching Roslyn.

At the four corners where the North Hempstead turnpike joins the Sea Cliff road there was a right-angled turn. Both cars threw on all their brakes and skidded into the main street. Down the hill and through the town they tore, to the delight of the few village story-tellers assembled in front of the local Greek's Around the Corner.

Behind them slid a Pierce runabout, its mudguard leaving a scar on the dummy cop as its swayed past. The patrons of the local Greek cheered.
