The Leader

Here is the Gigoilo hat that is such a sensation in Paris as well as in this country. The dented crown makes it easily adjusted to any head and the narrow brim is the smart line of the moment. In soft French felt, this hat cannot be surpassed in chic.

An Occasional Column By MILES WOLFF

Glenna, the girl contributor, again comes to the bat. Stung by last week's innuendos in this column to the effect that she was incapable of continuing her literary endeavors which she promised weekly, she brought her facile pen into play this week and had her item in the sanctum, ready to be published on Monday. However, I was busy Monday afternoon, what with mailing checks to clamoring creditors and with answering long due letters from friends, so I did not get to do any work. Glenna, therefore, did not appear in her regular Tuesday paper.

Before I forget it, one of the Kanopolis contributors writes a very personal but flattering epistle in which she attributes her continued reading of our sheet to my very spasmodic effusions. Here is what she says: "We received a statement telling us our subscription to 'your' paper had expired and I'm blaming you for it, as it is our first one since you've been reporter. I had planned to have the paper stopped but feel that I can't live happily (the last two words underscored) without hearing from you, so I will be down at the first opportunity to renew my subscription if I have to borrow the money."

Coming back to Glenna, here is what she has to say: "It has been unfortunate that I have had to disappoint you for two weeks now. My Wolf told you last week how it happened that I did not write. I was too exhausted from my trip to the Carolina-Virginia game. The life of a little butterfly is a fragile thing and I was weary from doing the butterfly act. That reminds me—have you tried the Charleston?"

"If you have not, you simply must learn it for Christmas. I would recommend it to all debutantes as it will make them the most popular dancers on the floor at the holiday festivities. To the fat because it is bound to reduce you. It develops a figure like Annette Kellerman. I say this with all modesty, because I have tried it and know it to be the truth. If you are thin and anaemic, it will improve your looks one hundred per cent. It stirs up the circulation and improves the color. For the old and the young, the fat and the thin, the Charleston is the thing to make you young in body and spirit."

"Greater than all these advantages, it gives you the Christmas spirit. As your feet swing back and forth you feel your spirits soaring and by the time you have learned the first step, you are converted to this most fantastic and exhilarating of all amusements."

"Between recuperating from the Carolina-Virginia game and learning the Charleston for the Christmas season, I have had little time to give to my literary pursuits."

"I did get time to read the Blind Boy and was disgusted. Such a book I would like to meet the man that wrote it to see just what a character he is. He has written a book about men and women and has not a red-blooded man or woman in it. The aim of the book seems to be to corrupt the only character who is not corrupt when the book opens. It succeeds."

"The principal characters are a mother without a mother's love, a wife without affection, a father without a sense of duty to his family, and a young boy without will power thrown into the whirlpool of the fastest life in New York to become the plaything of a snake charmer with no more morals than a cat. It is indeed a rare book and not to be recommended to the young and innocent, and the older people will dislike it for its lack of relevancy."

"In writing a book it is natural to draw upon the imagination and to overdraw the characters but there are bounds beyond which one must not go and I for one think that Van Vetchen has stepped beyond the pale. The ultra modern and the followers of his school will call me provincial and insular, no doubt. Let them do it. Better men than I have been so named before. If you must read a new book, read the 'Professor's House' or 'The Portrait of a Man With Red Hair.' You will find them much better reading."

TRAVELER FOUND AUTO SEAT TO HIS LIKING
Owen Green Refused to Leave Auto After Being Given a "Lift" by Charlotte Men.

It required the services of a police officer to move Owen Green from the back seat of an auto here Tuesday, but once he was taken from the car he was given a comfortable cot in the county jail. The story about Green runs something like this, according to police officers:

Two Charlotte men headed toward Concord in a sedan, were hailed by Green who asked for a lift. They agreed, giving him the entire back seat of the car. No sooner was he in the car, it is said, than Green went to sleep, the companions detecting then that he was drunk. When the party reached Concord the Charlotte men shook Green and suggested that he get out.

Green paid no attention to them. He found the seat of the auto better for sleeping purposes than anything else he had tried recently, and he not only refused to get out, but he refused to be awakened.

Patrolman Holdbrooks was called by the Charlotte men and after pulling, shaking and shouting at Green, the officer succeeded in waking him. A bottle of alcohol, with a grass stopper, and a bottle of dope, were taken from the prisoner, the officer reported. He also had on his person several snuff boxes, a quantity of matches, soap, tobacco and other things too numerous to mention.

At police headquarters Green told the officers that he had recently served a term on the chain gang at Spartanburg, S. C. Boastfully he added, "And Capt. Talbert said I was the finest worker he ever had there." Green insisted that he would get a "recommendation" from Capt. Talbert and later added that he would also soon get a "discharge." When asked why he had been put on the chain gang Green, with head nodding and mouth twitching, said:

"A man doped me and took $250 from me. They put you on the chain gang because you let 'em take the money from you?" an officer asked. "Yes," replied Green, and immediately he was taken to jail.

Green told the officers that he came from the north but had been in the south about eight years. He did not explain, however, whether he spent the entire eight years at the Spartanburg prison camp.

Funeral Services Will Be Held Thursday Morning at St. Johns Lutheran Church.

Mrs. M. J. Isenhour, 84, died early this morning at her home on 131 Cedar street after an illness which, though over a year in duration, had been critical for a period of one week. ### GRADY McALLISTER TO BE BURIED TOMORROW

Funeral Services Will Be Held Tomorrow Morning at 10 O'clock at Mt. Pleasant.

Funeral services for Grady McAllister, nine-year-old son of Prof. and Mrs. George F. McAllister, of Mt. Pleasant, who was fatally injured Tuesday shortly after noon when struck by a truck driven by Otis Bunn, of Ansonville, will be held tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in Mt. Pleasant.

The services will be held in Holy Trinity Church, conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. E. P. Fisher, assisted by Rev. R. A. Goodman, of Newberry, S. C., former pastor of the church.

A jury summoned by Coroner Joe A. Hartsell, of Concord, heard evidence in the case Tuesday afternoon and exonerated Bunn of all blame as evidence introduced tended to show that the truck ran directly in front of the child.

The accident occurred near the McAllister home as Grady was going to his home from school. He tagged a playmate and darted into the street to keep from being tagged just as the truck came along. He was struck by the front part of the truck and lived only a few minutes.

The Real South Seas.
When "Never the Twain Shall Meet," the Cosmopolitan Corporation's picturization of Peter B. Kyne's popular story released by Metro-Goldwyn, is presented at the Concord Theatre for two days, beginning today, the photoplay-going public will have an opportunity of viewing the actual scenery, people and life in general as it is lived in the South Sea Islands.

The greater part of this new picture was made in Tahiti, with numerous backgrounds and native scenes taken on the Island of Moorea, which is one of the less civilized of the South Sea group.

In bringing "Never the Twain Shall Meet" to the screen the Cosmopolitan Corporation assembled a noted cast of players, including Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell, Huntley Gordon, Justine Johnston, George Seignann, Lionel Belmore, Emily Fitzroy, William Morris, Florence Turner, and Princess Marie de Bourbon. Maurice Tourneur directed the production.

Play at Mt. Pleasant Postponed.
The play, "Little Women," which was to have been presented at Mount Pleasant on Friday evening, has been postponed a week on account of the death of Grady McAllister, who was killed Tuesday afternoon.

The play will be presented at a later time, the date to be announced at the future.
