Meets Walker

Tommy Milligan, welterweight pugilist champion of England, who recently arrived in this country. His first fight over here will be for the world championship when he meets Mickey Walker, present titleholder in January. Milligan is highly touted by European critics.

Two small nations started fighting in the Balkans, that powder magazine of Europe. Like a spreading fire the war began to increase rapidly, each nation trying to get the advantage before the other got started.

The league of nations whose main purpose is to prevent wars and keep the peace, but which had until then gone about that task rather timidly and hesitatingly, decided to act.

Various have been the comments on the league's performance in this case. All agree on one point only—that it was effective. League enthusiasts see through it the dawn of a new day and a millennium of peace.

By this accomplishment the league has acquired a greater moral force—and that was the kind of force it mostly needed. Coming right after the Locarno agreements the making of the League of Nations was another healthy stride of the world toward outlawing war.

A colored man in Washington was on trial for having committed an assault with a dangerous weapon. Prosecution and defense argued the case and presented all the evidence they had—which in favor of the defendant was not much.

Within a very few minutes the jurymen returned and the foreman arose with the intention of saying "guilty." But something must have stuck in his throat for when he did finally get his tongue loose he said "not guilty."

The wise spinster would rather travel hopefully without arriving than not at all.

Franklin and his kite. In the last year there has been considerable discussion about Benjamin Franklin and his kite. Did Franklin bring down lightning from the clouds during a thunderstorm, as popular opinion has it, or didn't he?

A letter written on the subject by Franklin, presumably in 1752, is interesting in this connection. Franklin writes: "Make a cross of two light strips of cedar, the arms so long as to reach the four corners of a large silk handkerchief when extended; tie the corners of the cross, so you have the body of a kite, which being properly accommodated with a tail, loop, and string, will rise in the air, like those made of paper, but this, being silk, is fitted to bear the met and wind of a thunder gust without tearing."

For 50 Cents. Peter Cassidy, eccentric Los Angeles term, claims to be the most economical person in America. He spends only 50 cents a week for food, clothing and lodging. How? He sleeps in a shack, eats little and gets clothes the second-hand man won't take. He earns his living by composing and singing songs.
