CONCORD—THE MUSIC CENTER

For years, Asheville has been recognized as the leading musical center in the state. The musically inclined of that city were enterprising enough to expend time, energy and money to bring a really worthwhile performance to that city.

Concord is rapidly coming to the fore in music and bids fair to become the premier small city musical center of North Carolina.

Certain it is also, that no other city in North Carolina has had, within the brief span of one week, two such concerts as were listened to in this city last week by large audiences.

Mrs. Wagoner's program, presented entirely from her own compositions, stands unique in the history of the state. It is safe to say that never before has a similar offering been made in either of the two Carolinas.

The other event of the week came a few days earlier when W. R. Odell presented two visiting artists of outstanding merit for his yearly recital on the Odell Memorial Organ at Forest Hill Church.

Regular Republicans must have decided they made a serious mistake in reading from the party former Senator LaFollette and other progressives.

Young LaFollette has been given membership on three Senate committees and it was from two of these committees that his father was exiled.

can give him committee appointment and all sorts of things but in the show down he will be a progressive, a free thinker and a free actor.

HANDICAPS WORK OF MISSIONARIES.

Missionaries in China are demanding that Christian nations practice their faith in dealing with the Chinese. This has never been done and because of this fact the missionaries are fighting it rather difficult to make proper headway with their teachings.

The stronger nations have taken advantage of the Chinese and so long as they keep this up the work of the Christian Church will be handicapped. It is practically impossible for the American missionary, for example, to teach a doctrine of equal rights for all when the United States, a strong nation, agrees to international laws that oppress China, a weak nation.

We are big enough to get along without allowing our subjects to take advantage of the ignorant Chinaman. International law as to tariffs and extra territorial rights have been advantageous to nations whose subjects deal with Chinese subjects. The fact that China is ignorant is more reason why we should protect her.

TODAY'S EVENTS

Wednesday December 16, 1925. Anniversary of the Boston Tea Party. Only one minute more decrease before the shortest day of the year.

One hundred and fifty years ago today was born Jane Austen, whose novels were the delight of our grandmothers. Ninety years ago today New York City was visited by the worst fire in its history, nearly 700 buildings being destroyed.

The Rt. Rev. John M. Cannon today observes his fifth anniversary as bishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of Erie, Pa. Members of the national affairs committee of the Woman's National Republican Club are to make a pilgrimage to Washington today in support of President Coolidge's policies before the United States Senate.

A special convention of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of New Hampshire meets at Concord to elect a bishop to succeed the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Parker, who died suddenly while attending the recent general convention at New Orleans.

A conference of police justices from the larger towns of New Jersey has been called to meet in Newark today to solicit their support of the anti-drunken-driving act to be introduced at the next session of the legislature.

Doctors Raise Obstetric Fee. Lexington Dispatch. Election of officers, raising the obstetric fee from a minimum of $20 to a minimum of $25 and passage of a recommendation that the county health board require servants working in private homes to have a health certificate similar to those required for cafe employees, marked the meeting of the Davidson County Medical Society Friday night.

Schoolmasters' Club. China Grove, Dec. 15.—At the regular meeting of the Schoolmasters' club of Rowan county, held at the Yakin hotel last night, Dr. Willis Allen Parker, of the Playgrounds Recreation association of America, made a forenoon as well as enlightening the student to do some one thing better than anyone else.

Women who remain single can console themselves with the thought that they were born that way. D'ORSAY TOILET WATER. An exquisite nicety in the toilet of women. Used to perfume the bath, the hand basin, the shampoo, cooling and refreshing in case of fatigue or headache.

SYNOPSIS: Conmemara Moore finds herself, after midnight, aboard a yacht in Long Island Sound. With her are David Lacy, Pooch, Doc and Sweetie, all strangers to her and, except for Doc and Sweetie, strangers to each other. Conmemara insists that Lacy take $50,000 in bills which Pooch has mysteriously handed her.

CHAPTER IX—Continued. "One of my college friends—he's in the government service. Let's get that anchor out. She's drifting like a seaweed in this tide."

For a few minutes McTish and Lacy were gruntingly occupied with the business of anchoring. Then, as the Bloody Nuisance settled herself to ride the waves as sweetly as a summer boarder rides the best porch rocking chair, Lacy got out a cigarette and lit it greedily.

"This has been something of a night," he said. "I need stimulant. McTish, you keep on watch and I'll gather myself a drop of coffee and get on some dry clothes. Ladies, how's your various thirsts?"

"I'd love a cup of coffee. I heard about it when I first came on board, but it never appeared," said Conmemara. "I'm hungry, too."

"So'm I," confided Sweetie. "I could eat a hot dog made out of my own pet rabbit."

"Oh, do you like dogs?" asked Conmemara, interested. "I'm frightfully fond of them—I have the most adorable police dog named—"

David Lacy appeared now, with a tray containing steaming coffee in cups without saucers, an opened can of condensed milk, and some stray lumps of sugar. In his other hand he had a large tin of crackers and his hair, though still wet, was brushed, and the wetness gave rather the affect of fashionable sickness.

"Class," said Sweetie, whispering to Conmemara. "What'd I tell you? He's class. Oh, boy, that coffee smells good! Come to mamma, darling!" She seized a cup, half emptied the condensed milk in it, added four lumps of sugar and seized a handful of crackers.

The coffee smelled and tasted good to Conmemara too. She drank it gratefully, but her mind was on Sweetie's offer of a moment before. Conmemara was suffering acutely from the knowledge that she was grotesquely dressed. Lacy had taken coffee to McTish and stayed beside him, talking in a low tone. This was Conmemara's opportunity.

"Let's go into that place—where he was, and see if we can't find some dry things for you. And if there's anything to sew with, and you would get me together a little, I'd be eternally grateful."

Sweetie gulped the last of her coffee, crammed the last of her crackers in her mouth. "Awri," she said, "I'm strong enough to do anything now."

The two girls moved together to the bunk room. A little rummaging brought to light some men's clothes, and with considerable giggling, Sweetie was presently changed into a smallish, dapper youth in correct yachting get up of white trousers and blue coat. The clothes were large for her, but the general effect was good. She spread her own things to dry as best she could in the limited space, and then looked about her capably. A small box on the shelf that was evidently the dressing table—for there was a mirror above it and a comb on it—caught her eye, and she opened it and brought out in triumph a huge needle, a spool of white thread, and a pair of scissors.

"No thimble—but it don't matter. Say, take off them things and let's see what we can do."

Duke Students to Attend Memphis Meeting. Durham, Dec. 16.—(P)—Duke University will be represented at the annual convention of young people of the Methodist Church at Memphis, Tenn., December 31st to January 3rd, by a group of 14 students and several professors. The delegation will be accompanied by Dr. Edmund D. Soper, dean of the school of religion at Duke; Professor H. E. Spence, Professor Harry Brantcomb, and others. It is possible that Dr. William P. Few, president of the university, may also attend. A group of Duke students will also attend the Interdenominational Conference of College Students, which will be held during the holidays at Evansville, Ill. "Those fishermen have a hard life, remarked the first man. "Oh, I don't know," replied his tired looking friend. "Think of being able to go fishing without quitting work."

MOTHER AND CHILD ARE BURNED TO DEATH

Little Girl who started blaze With Kerosene Dies in Ambulance and Mother Passes Away in Hospital Ten Minutes Later. Wilmington, Dec. 15.—Mrs. Nora Brinson, of Holly Ridge, died at a local hospital at 5:50 p. m. today as a result of burns received earlier in the day when she attempted to save her little girl from flames that engulfed her as a result of pouring kerosene on a smoldering fire. The child, nothing more than a little tot, died in the ambulance with her mother ten minutes before the hospital was reached although the driver broke all speed laws in his mad dash in from the east in an effort to get the two patients to the hospital for treatment.

The mother gave the little girl kerosene with which to build a fire at their home in the country. The child, unaware of the danger, used it freely with the result that she was terribly burned. The mother suffered burns in an effort to save her from which she died ten minutes after her baby had expired in a careening ambulance.

Abusing Credit. Statesville Daily. "There has never been a panic in this country that was not brought on by the misuse of credit," the managing director of the National Association of Credit Men declares. Which same has foundation, as prosaically understood. In times of prosperity credit is easy and is misused by over-extension. Because credit is easy the disposition is to take long chances. If all goes well all will be well. But presently, from some cause, and the over-extension of credit may be the cause, there is a drawing in, a tightening up, as a matter of safety if for no other reason. The trouble begins and disaster follows. In good times when credits are easy, the temptation is to gamble in the way of investments. In many instances the gamble means loss even if the credit continues easy. But when the tightening up begins the penalty for the easy credit must be paid; and often the penalty spells ruin. After the contraction era has passed the same process begins over again. There need not be cycles of expansion and contraction if credit was kept within reasonable bounds. But as that is next to impossible, but the cycles will always appear in greater or less degree.

Loyalty. A traveling salesman was marooned, as being in a small town. Only this isn't that kind of a story. For an hour he had been pacing the station platform, although the ticket agent had assured him that the trains were always on time. Finally, at the end of his patience, the salesman strode up to the grilled window. "Why didn't you tell me this train was late when I phoned you?" he asked. The agent looked him over suspiciously. "Looky here, mister," he replied, "I ain't paid to set here an' knock the railroad."

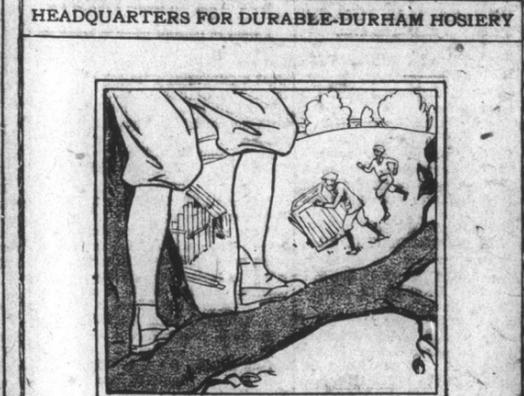

Coming, Sweetie, said David Lacy, sticking his head out of the bunk room. "Just waiting for the coffee to boil up for the third time." "You got any sewing things, needle and thread and scissors?" demanded Sweetie. "If you have, clear out o' that hole down there and let us ladies have it. We got to do a little private work, her and me."

"Don't mind that. You can call me Gloria-Swanson-Mary-Pickford-Lillian-Gish, if you wanta, but there ain't gon' to be honest-to-Gawd monickers spilled on this party. Say, I do wish I could mend you up. You look like something the cat brought in in that old coal and that dirty white stuff hanging out below. Hey, mister, in there—"
