Postmaster's Slayer Commences Sentence.

Charlotte, March 30.—The last chapter of a shooting affair, which last Thanksgiving night cost the life of Joseph P. Hinson, postmaster at P. Neville, was written today in the office of the clerk of Mecklenburg superior court when Zeb Darnell, a prominent farmer, who in the course of a fight which occurred at a drinking party, killed Hinson and who had been at liberty on a bond of $5,000 since the January term of court, pending an appeal, surrendered to Sheriff Cochran to begin serving the sentence imposed upon him. This sentence was not less than four years, nor more than five, on the Mecklenburg county roads. He was taken to McLaughlin's convict camp, near Mint Hill, this afternoon. "Darnell surrendered to the sheriff this morning at the expiration of the time allowed for filing an appeal," said J. Lawrence Jones, his counsel.

OUR HEALTH.

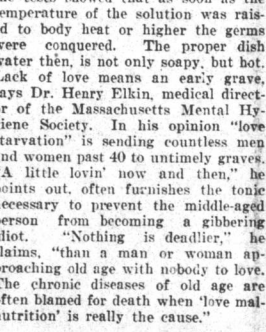

Sunlight treatment is said to have ended the horrors of infantile paralysis. According to Dr. G. Murray LeVick, medical director of the Heritage Craft Schools at Challey, England, who originated the treatment, no other treatment has ever had as good results as this treatment. Dr. LeVick first discovered that neurasthenia in-grown-ups and rickets in children are due to the same cause. He claims that these diseases are nutritional disturbances of the nerve centers affecting the bone in the young and the nervous system in the old. His success in treating these diseases with the sun's rays led him to apply it to cases of infantile paralysis.

Air-sickness, or the fear of it, has deterred many people from using air transportation. Air-sickness is about the same as seasickness and is caused by sudden jolts up and down when the plane hits air pockets or currents.

The medical adviser to the British air ministry has been studying the problem of air-sickness but has found no way to solve it by the use of drugs or anything else. The trouble, the adviser claims, is that centrifugal of an enclosed airplane cabin is particularly difficult. If the air in the cabin is changed often enough to keep the carbon-dioxide content low there must be a terrible draft on someone. If drafts are excluded the carbon-dioxide content in the small cabin soon rises and the air becomes unpleasant. This condition, particularly at meal times, aids in producing air-sickness.

In the opinion of Dr. J. E. Walker, of the Army and Navy general hospital, washing dishes in hot soap-suds will help to prevent pneumonia and other diseases. If the dish water contains one half of one per cent, of ordinary yellow or brown soap, he says, the pneumococcus which causes pneumonia and the streptococcus which causes many other diseases "become discouraged immediately, emit three feeble groans, and take their places in the army of those that are dead and done." Dr. Walker has conducted scientific tests which revealed that cold soap solutions did not definitely affect typhoid germs. However, the tests showed that as soon as the temperature of the solution was raised to body heat or higher the germs were conquered. The proper dish water then, is not only soapy, but hot. Lack of love means an early grave, says Dr. Henry Elkin, medical director of the Massachusetts Mental Hygiene Society. In his opinion "love starvation" is sending countless men and women past 40 to untimely graves. "A little love" now and then, he points out, often furnishes the tonic necessary to prevent the middle-aged person from becoming a gibbering idiot. "Nothing is deadlier," he claims, "than a man or woman approaching old age with nobody to love. The chronic diseases of old age are often blamed for death when 'love malnutrition' is really the cause."

MISS MARIE K. JOHNSON

CHICAGO—Rouge pots and lipsticks are due to follow the bustle and other feminine aids to charm into retirement if the prognostication of Miss Marie K. Johnson, director of the Better Health Bureau, comes true. "Styies in complexion," Miss Johnson says, "are going to be as natural and the milk fed girl will come into her own."

Her recipe for beauty is simple. "Drink a quart of milk a day, or a pint of rich, germ-free evaporated milk diluted with water, and add an hour's exercise in the sunshine," she says, "and continue until he speaks about the bungalow and the climbing roses."

"Proper Food and Exercise," by ARTHUR A. McGOVERN Former physical director, Cornell Medical College

Practical suggestions for inducing sleep

THE person who is of a nervous temperament, or the brain worker who cannot forget the happenings of the day upon retiring, will find the following suggestions helpful in inducing refreshing slumber. One of the best methods to encourage sleep is to try to reproduce the conditions which make a child's rest so perfect. Exercise actively enough during the day to feel the need of rest when night falls, and then try to dismiss all thoughts from the mind, especially thoughts of work and worry, which will excite the brain in endeavoring to solve problems, therefore keeping it in the same chaotic condition as it has been all during the day. A great many people find that a glass of warm milk and a cracker before retiring for the night insures sleep. The explanation of this is that the amount of blood in the brain is lessened by making the stomach's organs active. There are many different causes for insomnia, and it is impossible to connect this condition with any one functional disorder. However, it is generally agreed that in chronic cases it is purely psychological as these victims always dread going to bed and work themselves up to a nervous pitch convincing themselves that they are going to lie awake half of the night. Two suggestions I have known to prove beneficial are these: Just before retiring place the feet in a pan of hot water. This tends to draw the blood from the head. The other way is to do some passive exercise just before retiring. It is not a good habit to lie on the left side all through the night, as this causes a slight pressure on the heart, and for the nervous person this is bad, as it makes them conscious of the heart's action. Therefore, a good plan is to lie on the left side until drowsiness comes, and then turn on the right side. The circulation may be affected by lying in a cramped-up position in bed, and this may retard sleep. It is best to sleep with the body straight and relaxed, and without any consciousness of weight or strain, and not too much bed covering as due to its weight it is a hindrance to sleep. The body should create its own heat, and if a normal amount of coverings are used and found insufficient, it is better to remedy this condition by improving the circulation than by the added number of blankets. Regardless of the hour at which we retire, we should rise at the same hour every morning in order to be properly tired for the next night's sleep, and after mental work during the day there should be some mild recreative physical work in the evening—not too much, as an over-tired body is similar to being nervously fatigued and will have a tendency to keep one awake.

"AIN'T MEN FUNNY"

There are a series of cartoons running in our daily papers which invariably end up with the terse query from the animal kingdom, "Ain't Men Funny?" When we read about the misfortune of Tony Porcelli, the Shelby Italian, who is reported to have aroused the ire of certain Shelbyites because he burned a Bible, we can readily join in the cartoon question.

Almost daily in some of our state papers, the Holy Bible is held up to ridicule, and in free parlance, spit upon, by citizens of the state who pose and pass as representatives of the intelligence of the state, and our Shelby friends smugly read these devouring flames from the press without even a rise in temperature.

But behold what a tide of wrath is raised when a poor, ignorant, passionate Southern Italian gets mad and burns a Bible. No doubt some of the selfsame protectors of the faith have on occasion hit their thumbs with a hammer, and cried "dam," which was about on a par with the poor Italian's efforts to satisfy his rage over something that had offended him. It is reported that Tony is a Catholic and therefore persona non grata with those elements that hold that God must at all hazards be protected by the might of man. Why do they not know that God's word lived and grew despite the bonfires of medieval days?

It is also reported that Tony after recovering from his incipient frenzy asked one Graham, a Shelby citizen, "What can I do to enable me to stay in Shelby?" and that he received the consoling answer, "Join a Christian church."

This was no doubt calculated to have caused Tony to soliloquize "Ain't Men Funny?" because Tony had always been led to believe that being a staunch Catholic, he belonged to a Christian church.

But out of the riot of fact and opinion which arise from the Shelby-Tony incident, this much is clear: The qualification for citizenship in the city of Shelby seems firmly fixed by the fiat of one Graham, who thought not a priest, is reputed to be partial to the cow and gown.

To be a resident of Shelby, it seems that one must "join a Christian church." No doubt when the next United States census is taken there will be appended to the report a comment upon this once populous city entitled "Strange case of shrinkage, or what happened when Tony lost his temper."

We heartily refer our laborers in the mission field to the Shelby method of Christian conversion. "Ain't men funny?"
