Going to Make the Best of It. (By International News Service) Raleigh, N. C., July 9.—"Here I am, Warden. Lock me up."
With these words Herman Banks, of Asheville, entered the State Prison here to begin serving a sentence of from four to eight years for having been a member of the mob that stormed the Buncombe County jail in search of Alvin Karpis before Mansel's trial and conviction for the same.
"It is an unpleasant situation for me," Banks said. "However, I am going to make the best of it."
Banks maintains that he was an on-looker rather than a member of the mob which stormed the jail.

Musical World Celebrates 200th Anniversary of Piano

CHICAGO—Piano action of today is little changed from that of the first piano ever made, declared Harry Edward Freund, in an address here in commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the invention of the piano by Bartolomeo Cristofori in 1726.

"Problem of the piano was solved by Cristofori when he invented the method of making the hammer strike the strings and rebound, so as not to stifle the vibration by remaining in contact. This gave the piano the power of having its notes louder or softer, according to the force with which the keys were struck, an improvement of the utmost importance in enabling the player to put expression into the music.

"On the harpsichord, the piano's predecessor, the player could do no more than make the music faster or slower, the notes always having the same gentle tinkle as the strings were plucked by quills.

"Piano e forte" was the name given the new instrument, from two Italian words, 'piano,' meaning soft, and 'forte,' meaning strong, from the fact that the notes could be made soft or strong at will by the player.

"Cristofori would perfectly recognize as his own the piano action of today. Modern development has been along the line of perfecting the roll-played piano as an instrument of expression. From Cristofori to the Gulbransen registering piano is 200 years of continued advance, with the simple modified harpsichord at one end, which changed the whole world of music, to the registering piano at the other, capable of playing the world's greatest music with individual expression and power of control.

"Cristofori was born in Padua, Italy, in 1655. He was brought to Florence, Italy, in 1690 by Prince Ferdinand de Medici, and died there in 1731. This year the whole world is honoring the second century of his invention."

Picturesque Old Nova Scotia, the Land of Evangeline, Which Still Holds the Charm of Longfellow's Acadia

ACADIAN RELICS AT GRAND PRE

L.M. FORTIER AT FORT ANNE, ANNAPOLIS ROYAL

Nova Scotia is now one of the popular playgrounds of people from the United States. While it is totally different in character from the Canadian Pacific Rockies where Banff and Lake Louise are such favorites, it is a peaceful land with very attractive scenery and an historical background which even antedates old Quebec, on the heights of the St. Lawrence. Nova Scotia is easily reached from the United States through Boston by steamship or from St. John, New Brunswick by rail and the S. E. "Empress" which crosses the Bay of Fundy to Digby, Yarmouth, Digby, Kentville and Grand Pre are all exceedingly interesting. In the early summer 100 miles of perfectly groomed orchards delight the visitor, and at Digby there is excellent fishing, both in the sea and inland trout waters. In the fall, the big moose with the broad antlers, hears and answers the call of the Micmac guides.

Annapolis Royal, which was founded in 1604, four years before Quebec, is, beyond doubt, one of the most interesting places in Nova Scotia. The old fort at Annapolis Royal is now a Dominion park in which is a building called the officers' quarters, built by the Duke of Kent, Queen Victoria's father. This building was saved from destruction by L. M. Fortier, surator of the park, and contains a remarkable collection of relics covering the early history of Nova Scotia.

Grand Pre, the home of Evangeline, is a tiny village conspicuous for Evangeline Memorial Park. In this park are a statue of Evangeline, a cross over the Acadian cemetery, the ancient willows planted by the Acadians, Evangeline's well, and a memorial chapel erected by descendants of the Acadians, who were expropriated in 1755. In this chapel is a marble statue of Virgin Mary which cost $5,000. Hardly a month passes that some historical relic dating way back to the Acadians is not dug up near Grand Pre.

MEXICO MAKES REPLY TO CATHOLIC CIRCULAR

New Religious Regulations May Be Taken as Answer to Political Activity.

Mexico City, July 9.—The new religious regulations, it was declared in the first detailed authorized statement of the viewpoint of the Mexican government last night, may be taken as the government's reply to a recent circular of high church dignitaries to Catholics throughout the republic, asking them to take active part in national politics, organize political associations and, in general, to present a united front to control the government administration.

"The present regulations," it was added, "define violations of the constitutional provisions, and in some cases go a little farther on the constitutional provisions and give them more strict application."
"Although the circular issued by the church dignitaries directs Catholics to adopt a peaceful attitude and not resort to violence, the government in its regulations is limiting the activities of Catholic priests so that they might keep themselves within their religious practices."

"The regulations apply to all religions, but the Catholic church is most affected, because it is the purpose of the Mexican government to keep the Catholic Church outside politics. Prohibition of religious teaching in official schools and private, primary and high schools has been enforced for a long time. We now add penalties for priests and teachers who violate this ruling."

"Mexico has been closing and attempting to close convents and monasteries for sixty years because the Mexican government cannot tolerate the theory that the freedom of man may be sacrificed through a contract for work, teaching of religious vows."
"But, as it has always been possible to evade these efforts at closure the present regulations endeavor to make evasions and violations impossible by strict punishment of individual violators.

"The regulations undoubtedly curtail the freedom of the press, but only in regard to religious publications, or those publications showing a marked inclination to favor any religious creed."

"Such publications after July 31st should limit themselves to news not related to governmental acts or national political affairs, and are denied the right to criticize the authorities or comment upon laws."

"The regulations have nothing whatever to do with non-religious publications—that is, independent newspapers and publications—which are guaranteed press freedom."
