ANOTHER'S FACE MAY WIN YOU FAME

Good Actor, Says Chaney, Must "Steal" Faces For Own Use. The secret of success in make-up, according to Lon Chaney, master of strange disguises, is observation.

In other words, to know how to don a strange disguise, the actor must know the details of some face in real life that is like the one he sets out to reproduce by artificial means.

"It resolves down to, not a study of the anatomy of the face, but of the anatomy of many faces," explains Chaney, in discussing his latest and perhaps strangest make-up.

The weird depiction of the one-eyed "Singapore Joe" in his new starring vehicle, "The Road to Mandalay," playing at the Concord Theatre Monday and Tuesday, Chaney achieved the weird disguise with very little save an artistic painting of his own face, placing in artificial wrinkles, patterned after a certain face he knew, and then eliminating one eye by a secret process of his own.

Mystery Drama. The new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production is a vivid mystery drama of Singapore, Mandalay, and Bengal Bay. Chaney plays the sinister ruler.

The story is unique in that, through its thrills and creepy mystery runs a beautiful love story that the grewsome situations serve to enhance. It is lavishly staged and costumed, especially the Singapore scenes, with almost every race in the world represented in its colorful crowds.

Movie Actor Sees Double Hanging to Get "Atmosphere." San Quentin, Calif., Oct. 8.—A motion picture actor looking for "atmosphere" for a hanging picture visited San Quentin prison today and witnessed a double execution.

He was Bert Lytell. He stood in the very front row as Alphonse Rinecon and William Adams plucked up the thirteen gallows steps in their slippered feet and took their places on the twin traps and beneath the twin nooses. He saw them fall; heard Rinecon's head strike against the edge of the death stage and saw the cap torn from Adams face by some unexplained twist of the drop. "It sent the cold shivers up and down my spine," he said. "I'm glad it's over." "Yes, I got plenty of atmosphere but I needed the air more."

Queen Marie to See Estranged Son. Paris, Oct. 8.—Although members of Queen Marie's entourage have admitted that she will see her estranged son, former Crown Prince Carol, before she departs on her trip to the United States, the Prince thus far has not visited her. It was reported that Prince Carol, who came here yesterday from his retreat near Paris, where he has been living with Mme. Lupescu, remained in Paris today. A member of the Queen's suite said that if he sought an appointment, his mother would surely see him. Then, under a little persistent questioning, she finally admitted that her royal mistress would see Prince Carol before leaving for America next Tuesday. The earliest complete clock of which there is certain record was made by a Saracene mechanic in the thirteenth century.
