AYCOCK PORTRAIT IS GIVEN TO HIGH SCHOOL

Portrait is Gift of Woman's Club While Formally Presented at Friday Evening.

Fitting tribute to the memory of the immortal Charles B. Aycock was paid at the Concord High School Friday evening when a magnificent portrait of the noted leader of the State was presented to the school by the Woman's Club.

The portrait of the beloved crusader for public education in North Carolina, is the work of a noted artist and does honor to the illustrious man it portrays. It will hang in a prominent place in the school so that it may be an inspiration to future citizens of the State who pass in and out of the school building daily.

The presentation was made by Mrs. W. H. Gorman, one of the organizers and first president of the Woman's Club. It is fitting for the picture of Governor Aycock to be hung in school buildings, Mrs. Gorman said, because he gave the best years of his life to a movement that has benefited people in all walks of life.

The gift was accepted for the school by Prof. A. S. Webb who challenged his hearers to go to the polls and vote to give every one in North Carolina an equal opportunity to receive an education.

"Governor Aycock," he said, "spoke of universal education and by that he meant equal opportunity for all. We are not carrying out his teachings unless when the time comes we go to the polls and vote to give the children of the rural sections an eight months school term."

Mr. Webb spoke briefly of the size of the audience, explaining that several conflicting dates no doubt accounted for the small audience. He mentioned a political meeting in Kannapolis and added that apparently "a live politician is a greater drawing card than a dead educator."

The principal address was made by L. T. Hartsell, Jr., who said he could not justly cover his subject, "The Life and Work of Charles B. Aycock" because no man could do that without unlimited time.

Mr. Hartsell closed his speech with a plea for an 8-months school term for rural North Carolina children, expressing the opinion that Governor Aycock would be on the stump for such a term were he living today.

Charles B. Aycock. Mr. Hartsell said, determined to fight for education when as a young man he saw his mother "touch the pen" when her husband was dealing property to another. When in school and later at the University he was a leader, the speaker said, being chosen Chief Marshal for commencement when a member of the freshman class, this being the only time in the history of the institution that such a thing has been done.

In the middle '90s, said Mr. Hartsell, Mr. Aycock started his drive to rid the State of corruption and graft in government and then laid the foundation for his educational drive. When he had the law fixed so that no one who could not read and write after 1908 could not vote, he said, Governor Aycock was strengthening his drive for education. People want to vote, and the need of an education was thus impressed on them.

Governor Aycock was a simple man with simple tastes, Mr. Hartsell said, and so far as is known he never made a vulgar remark about anybody or anything. "Governor Aycock never spoke against anything; he always spoke for something," said the speaker.

The speaker said Dr. McIver and Dr. Alderman really started the educational drive in North Carolina but Governor Aycock was the man who put it across. "And he was for universal education," Mr. Hartsell said, "By universal he meant equal. Do we agree that we are carrying out the great principles of this fearless leader when we give city children a nine-months school term and rural children only a six-months term?"

Several selections by the high school orchestra, a vocal solo and an encore by Harvey G. Bush were interesting features of the program.

Miss Mabel Graeber Wins the $20.00 in Gold.

After a careful checking up of the answers to the "Who's Who" page in last Saturday's Tribune, it was found that Miss Mabel Graeber's answer was nearest correct. She made only one error in 32. She, therefore, wins the $20.00 in gold offered as a prize. There were many other answers, and we thank all of these contestants for their interest in the matter. The ads, with the answers are again published on page ten today, last page of the second section.

WEEKLY COTTON REVIEW.

New York, Oct. 8.—The cotton market has shown continued weakness, with prices making new low records for the season during the past week. After selling off to 12.97 for December contracts on Monday, the market rallied about half cent from the lowest on covering in advance of today's government report, but met increased offerings and broke very severely today under a renewal of heavy general selling, inspired by the increased crop figures.

December deliveries sold off to 12.36 under this pressure, making a decline of very near six cents a pound as compared with the high price of last month before the break was checked by covering and trade buying. The latter caused moderate rallies, but bearish sentiment was still very much in evidence at the close of the week and it looked as if the fairly good weather reported in the south since the beginning of October was leading to a further increase in estimates of the yield.

Private crop reports published in advance of today's official statement had pointed to an improvement in crop prospects during the second half of September, but had hardly prepared the market for the government's indication of 16,672,000 bales. This was about 800,000 bales above the mid-September forecast and in view of recent good weather, was regarded by some of the local traders as pointing to a probable total yield of fully 17,000,000 bales.

The south was a very heavy seller here immediately following the publication of the figures, which naturally raised a question as to the effectiveness of a holding movement while so much cotton remained to be marketed in the belt, but judging from much of the current comment, prices are now low enough to attract the attention of investors as well as a forward demand from the trade.

With any slackening of selling pressure in the south the demand based on belief that prices are below the average cost of production, would be expected to make itself felt. In the meantime, some progress has been reported in plans for financing the orderly marketing of the crop and while at the end of this week some traders were talking 10-cent cotton, others were looking for stabilizing influences, either through an early appearance of an increased trade and investment demand, or a tightening up of the spot situation.

motor car Performance that started the motor car industry

THE motor car industry was started when Buick presented the new Buick with an engine vibrationless beyond belief.

If you have driven this great new car, with this remarkable engine, you know why.

Its fluid smoothness makes other motor cars seem rough, harsh, noisy.

People who have driven Buicks for years and people who have owned much more expensive cars, are captivated by the luxury of this one.
