several million years, Dr. Arthus Hans, of the University of Vienna, told a student audience in Slocum Hall, Syracuse University. Dr. Hans lectured under the auspices of Syracuse (Chapter, Sigma Xi, scientific honorary fraternity. Though he experienced difficulty with the English tongue, Dr. Hans explained to his listeners that though eventually the earth will waste completely away, that very likely it will reform itself form the energy it has given off since its birth. By the same theory, the speaker declared that all solar bodies of the universe are whittling down, but said that what energy they give off will form new worlds. He said the matter is reconstructed from radiation and tithough the universe awill fall apart it will build itself together again every few million, and demolation. In a million rears of a million of the story of the atom. After telling the history of the atom, which cannot be seen under the strongest microscope, Dr. Hans declared that the atom might not only be the source energy, but energy the maker of the atom. Dr. Hans said that the universe is gradually wasting away, that the interior of a fixed star is at a temperative of millions of degrees, causing aunihation of matter to such a degree that at star looses most of its mass during its lifetime. The sun is gradually becoming less, that it would be hardly possible to note the change in it since the beginning of the world. Dr. Hans stated that apparently the universe is passing through a cycle of construction and demolation.
