Farmers Well-Pleased With Prices Received On Local Auction Markets

West Jefferson continues to earn the title of a "bean center," as thousands of bushels of this vital war food pour in daily to be sold on the auction markets and then to be sent on to consumers.

On Monday and Tuesday, approximately 23,000 busels were sold on the two local markets for an average of $1.79, bringing farmers approximately $39,927.74. Reports for the season show that local markets are far ahead of last year in volume and price.

While the price was slightly lower, it was pointed out that due to the increase in volume as well as the decrease in quality in some sidered very good.

Due to continued rains, some ceans have become slightly too full to be of top quality and others have become slightly sandy. Beans grown in this section are being shipped out by rail and motor express over a wide area.
