The Hearth-Stone.

A holy place is the hearth-stone. Where loved ones are gathered round. Where mothers, sires and sisters dear, And brothers and friends are found. A holy place is the hearth-stone, Home's innermost shrine is there. Laden with blessed benison, And hallowed by loving prayer.

A holy place is the hearth-stone. What clustering joys abide Where the cradle of our infancy Was rocked by a mother's side; A holy place is the hearth-stone; Where childhood's pattering feet Go prancing in shade and sunshine. To the music of pleasure's beat.

A holy place is the hearth-stone. Where youths have wooed and won, And wed and gone to the battle Of life, with full armor on; A holy place is the hearth-stone. Where manhood has settled down With blessings blossoming around him, And love for a priceless crown.

A holy place is the hearth-stone. Whence the old and the young have gone To rest from their weary labor, When the battle of life was done; And oh! from the holy hearth-stone, When parted from those we love, May we go to meet by the hearth-stone Of Our Father's house above.

A strong sermon on the past, present and prospective conflict between organized capital and organized labor, was delivered by the Rev. Thomas Dixon yesterday, before a large congregation in Association Hall. He said the last fifty years had been an era of corporate power. Competition had been overdone, and monopoly had been the inevitable result. Rulers have been corporate directors, bank officers, railroad presidents and mining kings.

A new era bids fair to be an era of stirring events, in which will be found the hopes and destinies of generations yet unborn. The men who have built up gigantic fortunes have not, as a rule, committed crimes in the process. They are men of daring enterprise, genius, skill and industry. They have done only what those who curse them would have done had they been given the opportunity and the power.

"We see this future of storm outlining itself," said Mr. Dixon, "in the assault through the Courts. The back-bone of the Sugar Trust has been broken in the Courts, charters have been revoked and havoc played with the vast fortunes figured on paper. Now the corporation that endangers life or limb is in danger of annihilation if a jury's verdict is taken as final. The millionaire directors of one of the richest railroads in America are now under indictment for the loss of the lives of its employees in the recent tunnel disaster. It is not difficult to read the meaning of that sentiment of deep and bitter hostility. Forty years ago such men were considered the highest order of public benefactors. Now they are the object of hatred and suspicion to millions.

"The conflicts between organized labor and organized capital are becoming more and more bitter and brutal. Bitter on the part of the laborer, and brutal on the part of the corporations. The New York Central Railroad, with its prestige, its millions and its influence with other corporations, succeeded in crushing the Knights of Labor in a deliberately planned and brutally led assault. When the job was complete, Mr. Webb, with a perfect fiendish delight, proceeded to dance a jig on their quivering hide. The whole performance, while it was legitimate war, was inhuman and brutal, and only made the gulf that separates organized capital from the toiling millions, wider, deeper and more utterly impassable.

"In the recent conflict at Moorwood between the miners and the capitalists, dozens of men were shot down in cold blood. It was a sad day for the owners of mines in America when the command was given to fire at Moorwood. The Central Labor Federation, at its meeting at No. 85 Bowery on last Sunday, in issuing its call for a mass-meeting at Cooper Union, said: "All public means of protection have been turned into agencies of oppression; constitution, law and humanity are trampled under foot in the very halls of justice. Crimes against the law and liberty of working men are repeatedly committed, not only by ruffians in the pay of plutocrats, but by the judges the people have elected. Labor is on the very verge of complete enslavement. Shall our criminal plutocracy be stopped in its mad career, or shall it be permitted to tear down

Ten Dollar Bills For Curl Paper.

"Put a nice curl in my mustache, will you?" said a well-dressed man Wednesday morning as he leaned back in a chair in a Fourth street barber shop. "Yes, sir," said the barber as he tucked a towel under the man's chin. "I'll put a curl in it that will stay a week," he added a minute later as he pulled a couple of bits out of his pocket and smoothed them on the customer's shoulder. Then he twisted up one side of the mustache and deftly fastened with one of the bits. The same was done with the other. The man was surprised, evidently, at seeing money used for curl papers, and more surprised as he saw a big X in front of each eye. The barber applied the lather, but the man grew nervous.

"Is that money you have twisted in my mustache?" he asked. "Yes, sir, I always prefer good American scrip to common paper or tin foil. And," he added, after a pause, "it gives tone to the business."

"Well, I've had money in all parts of my clothes, in my shoes and hat band, even in my undershirt, but—well, I never had it in my mustache before. And they look like two saw bucks; are they?" "Yes; each is a ten. I have used two fifties, but that's when money was a little more plentiful."

The barber shaved away, and the customer evidently kept up thinking. The chair was near the door, and the facet some feet back into the shop. When the barber walked back to wet the towel, after going over the man's face once, the latter suddenly raised up, sprang from the chair and bolted out the door.

"Hold on there you—fool!" yelled the barber, as he ran to the door; but the man didn't hold. He ran up an alley in the same block. Then the barber sat down and roared, while the others in the shop joined in with him. "I thought he was going to do that all the time. Well, I've got the best of the bargain anyway. He has got the shave and the Confederate ten dollar bills, and I've got his hat."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Where Does the Farmer Come in? In connection with the recent purchases of smoking tobacco factories by the American Tobacco Company, the following statement has been going the rounds of the press: "It would seem that having secured control of the cigarette trade, the company have now secured the smoking tobacco trade also. No rise in prices of smoking tobacco or cigarettes as yet, and the company declare there will be none. The advantages to the company are that they will employ fewer agents than formerly in drumming up business and will maintain fewer offices in big cities at high rents and high salaries; but chiefly, the company saves money for its members by stopping the distribution of colored pictures to accompany each box sold. Millions of these pictures were scattered broadcast over the country. It is said that the individual firms now composing the American Tobacco Company spent $250,000 a year in colored pictures. Now there is no longer any competition worthy of the name. Each individual firm continues to manufacture its own peculiar brand, and the purchaser selects what he likes."

There is also an advantage to the jobbers and retailers, since they get a rebate from the purchase price. The rebate, however, is provisional. That is all very pretty, but the greatest advantage of all to the company is not stated. Before the organization of this gigantic Trust, there were dealers on every bright tobacco market who bought that grade of tobacco known as cutters and resold it to cigarette factories. This created competition among buyers and made better prices for the farmer. More than that, the cutter dealers handle this tobacco in their factories and gave employment to a large number of hands.

But now the occupation of the cutter dealer is gone. The Trust has one agency on each market, buys and handles its own tobacco without competition, and the result is that the price of cutters has declined about fifty per cent. A splendid advantage to the manufacturer of cigarettes and a saving far in excess of the saving in cigarette pictures, but the poor farmer has to pay for it.—Danville Register.

"Laying on Hands."

My friend, the agent of a Buffalo wall-paper house, was "taking on" with headache in Philadelphia, when a sleek-looking stranger about 25 years of age sat down beside us and asked: "Is the ache mostly over the eyes or in the back of your head?" "It's all over my head," groaned the victim.

"Exactly. Proceeds from a nervous state of the system. Ah! your pulse is away up. Let me see your tongue. I thought so; a cold current of air has chilled the nerves along the spine and smashing headache is the result."

"Are you a physician?" I asked. "Well, no, not in the ordinary sense. I am called a professor. Some call me a fakir, even. I effect cures by what is called laying on of hands. You are skeptical, of course; but I'll agree to cure your friend here in ten minutes or forfeit $50."

"For heaven's sake, go ahead!" groaned Tom. "If you can cure me in an hour I'll give you $10." We went down in the baggage department where the performance wouldn't attract so much attention, and the fellow began passing his hands over Tom's head and face and also rubbing his hands. He hadn't worked a minute before Tom said he felt better, and in ten the headache was entirely gone.

"Now, don't offer to pay me or I shall be offended," he said, as he stopped work, "and you had better sit quiet right where you are for about ten minutes. Close your eyes, thus, and lean back a little more, so."

He bowed himself out in a graceful way, and had been gone fifteen minutes when Tom carefully arose, opened his eyes, and suddenly called out: "Robbed, by thunder!" The fakir got $90 in cash, a railroad ticket to Washington, and a diamond pin worth $125, and the police haven't nabbed him to this day.—New York Sun.

A Philosophical Family. Amelia has pimples, and sores in the head, From humors internal her nose has grown red; She has a boil on her neck that is as big as a bell, But in other respects she is doing quite well.

And pa has dyspepsia, malaria and gout, His hands with salt-rheum are all broken out; He is prone to rheumatics that make his legs swell, But in other respects he is doing quite well.

And ma has night-sweats and a troublesome cough, That all of our doctors can't seem to drive off; She wakes every night and coughs quite a spell, But in other respects she is doing quite well.
