This demoralized the farmers, they were threatened with fire if they hauled any more cotton to the girs, and the ginners were notified that they would be burned out if they did not shut down their gins. At this season of the year Acworth usually receives two hundred bales a day. In the past week it has not received fifty baies. This is true of all the towns in the four counties named. The farmers and ginhers pledge themselves to subscribe lilierally to a fund for the employment of detectives to discover and punish the White Caps. They also recommend that all the gins be started up again.
