for yarn spinning, thus avoiding the objection to the great weight of steel as heretofore used, is said to have proved a decided advantage, and the process of manufacture is described as follows: A quantity of common pulp stock is run into molds the shape of a spindle, no attention being given to the whirl at this stage, and the cast of the molds is such that a spindle is produced about four times the required size in diameter.

In the process of hardening the soft, flabby spindle is placed in a compress, as it is termed—a sort of hydraulic device in which a force pump is employed to give an enormous pressure. The spindle is placed singly in a peculiar shell arrangement, so made that, by revolving certain screws in the side compress upon the spindle from all sides, the latter is pleted, a perfectly formed, hard, tough, substantial one is produced,
