"When the contribution plate is passed in church," said Mr. Gurgleby, "the man who puts in a one or a two dollar bill is pretty apt to fold it at least twice; in that shape it makes a very pleasing little patch of green in the plate, but one in which figures are not conspicuous, while the man who puts in a bigger bill is, I think, a little more apt to omit the second fold. I don't know exactly how to account for this, but I think there must be something about bills of the larger denominations that tends to make a man absentminded,"-New York Sun.

Daguerre's Process. The process devised by Daguerre was substantially as follows: A sheet of planish copper, plated with silver and well cleaned by treating with diluted nitric acid and washing with water, was exposed to the action of the vapors of iodine. By this exposure a thin film of iodide of silver was formed on the surface, certain mechanical precautions being taken to insure that it should be uniform in all parts. The sheet thus prepared was then placed in a camera substantially the same in principle as the photographic camera in use today and was exposed to the object for from eight to ten minutes. The plate was then covered and removed from the camera to a dark room, where it was exposed to the action of the vapor of mercury, aided by the application of gentle heat, by which the image was developed. It was then fixed by immersion in a solution of hyposulphite of soda, which dissolved out all the unchanged silver iodide. Washing with water followed, and the finished picture was protected by a cover of glass and suitably inclosed in a frame, one that could be closed, to protect it from fading under the action of the sunlight.-Manufacturer and Builder.

Paper Spindles. The introduction of paper spindles for yarn spinning, thus avoiding the objection to the great weight of steel as heretofore used, is said to have proved a decided advantage, and the process of manufacture is described as follows: A quantity of common pulp stock is run into molds the shape of a spindle, no attention being given to the whirl at this stage, and the cast of the molds is such that a spindle is produced about four times the required size in diameter. In the process of hardening the soft, flabby spindle is placed in a compress, as it is termed-a sort of hydraulic device in which a force pump is employed to give an enormous pressure. The spindle is placed singly in a peculiar shell arrangement. so made that, by revolving certain screws in the side compress upon the spindle from all sides, the latter is squeezed into a compartment about one-quarter its original size. The hydraulic power is used in making the apparatus turn, which gives motion to the numerous screws. When compression of the spindle is completed, a perfectly formed, hard, tough, substantial one is produced, and when dried and polished the surface is said to be as hard as metal. The whirls are next made.
