Your friends, 1-1-14. PASS BROS.

THE DOG WAS SURE TO COME BACK.

Henry B. Gross, the manufacturer, had some time ago a very peculiar experience with a dog—a red dog—a red setter dog.

His business took him to Elkton, Md. There, in front of a drugstore, he saw what he thought was a very handsome and fine dog, although he does not profess to be a judge of the canine race. The thought came to his mind that his wife was very anxious to possess an animal of that character, and so inquired of the man of drugs if he would part with his four-footed belonging. The country Galen said: "I dunno. Purty good dog, that. Would 'nt mind selling him if I got enough for him. Let ye have him for a tanner."

Mr. Gross closed the bargain with avidity. The druggist generously threw in the chain, and, holding one end of it, the Philadelphian tugged his prize to the railroad station, jealously guarded him in the baggage-car during the journey to the Quaker City, brought him to his home, and triumphantly presented him to his spouse. There was joy in the Gross household. In order to accustom him to his surrounding the dog was chained at night in the basement, and from midnight to sunrise the neighborhood was aroused with his howls. It was thought this vocal condition would pass by in twenty-four hours, but the next night was worse than the last; and, in order to subjugate the animal, the irate Gross arose from his couch and belabored him full sore, hoping thereby to bring him to a realization of proper conduct, just as recalcitrant children are sometimes subdued. The dog remained quiet during the day, but when the dogstar again flamed in high heaven, he lifted his voice and wailed in a way that made the teeth of the neighborhood grit and women turn pale with fear that death was in the house. The manufacturer, arising once more, went down and, after another flagellation, unchained him and let the canine pest loose in the yard, hoping that a comparatively free condition might bring him to a realization of his iniquity. The little free space in the rear of the house was surrounded with a fence about six feet high, which was supposed to give ample obstruction to the escape of the Elkton animal. Next morning when the Gross household arose from slumber that once again had come to disturbed pillows, the dog was gone, and had left no sign of his going.

Several months later business again took Mr. Gross to Elkton, and, as he passed by the apothecary's shop, there blinking and basking in the sun, was the selfsame dog that he had carried with him to Philadelphia. He said to the smiling son of Galen: "Why that's my dog you have there."

"Certainly it is," said the apothecary smilingly. "I didn't take him away from you. He belongs to you. take him home with you. He got back here somehow, but he is your property."

The Philadelphian said that he had some business at the other end of the town, and would return for the dog later. A bystander who had heard the conversation followed him, and accosting him, inquired: "Say mister, did you buy that dog?"

He was assured that such was the case, and then he chuckled. "Why," he said, with a laugh, "that drug-store man makes a pretty good living selling that dog. He has sold him about twenty times during the last year, but he comes back every time. May I ask how much you paid?"

When informed that $10 was the price paid he laughed immoderately, and when he recovered himself he said: "Well you are a greeny. That is the highest figure paid yet. Two dollars used to be the regular price, and he finally got it up to $5, but $10 beats the record."

Full of ire, the Philadelphian went back to the liar of the soda fountain, and said to the proprietor: "You have robbed me. You make a business of selling this dog."

The man placidly said: "What complaint have you to make? There is your dog. Take him home with you."

There was some further argument, and finally, when it was suggested to the apothecary that $10 was beyond the usual price, he said pleasantly: "Well, perhaps it is. But, of course, you must remember that the dog had to walk back, and we are entitled to some compensation, but I am willing to return you $5," and upon that basis the canine deal was settled.

Mr. Gross is now hunting for a good dog.—Philadelphia Times.

Cultivate Concentrative Energy.

More failures of effort come from a lack of concentrative energy than from a want of ability to accomplish the things undertaken. A firm, strong determination of will to the task that is to be performed is the first step toward making the performance a positive pleasure.

The next step, requiring greater self-control, is to withdraw all voluntary thought from things not strictly related to the matter with which you are seeking to deal. This withdrawal of the conscious mind from the distractions of more alluring thoughts is certainly not attainable without a training which we must assist in making as thorough as possible. It is gradually acquired just as the pliability of the body is acquired and maintained, by regular and systematic exercises.

But banish the idea that the training is difficult and tiresome. It is refreshing and invigorating. Prove it. You know how it is. When you come to any work you have to do in a perturbed, desperate, repellent attitude of mind, you run the risk of partial, if not of entire, defeat in its execution. A calm assurance that what you undertake to do can be adequately done puts you in right conditions to work out a satisfactory accomplishment of your task. There should be no will struggle. No violent effort is needed to attain high mental results. The trained habit of expelling all thought, like the drawing of a few deep breaths, leaves the mind a vacuum which may be filled the more completely by the subject it is about to investigate. Like a single shining star in the firmament the theme rises suddenly to view, and with your mental eye fixed steadfastly upon it the sight grows more and more luminous and clear.

Your problems are not difficult to solve. It is your own mind that has to be cleared of the obstructions that hinder its sight, and, lo! the secret that vexes you begins to unfold to your understanding and you feel that you "knew it all the time."—From "What Insures Success?" in Democrat's Magazine for February.

McClure's Magazine for February.

McClure's Magazine for February takes its first grasp of the reader's attention with eight portraits of Lincoln (several of them very rare), some twenty other Lincoln pictures, and an account, abounding in vivid personal details, of Lincoln's misfortunes as a country merchant; of his entrance into the legislature, and the beginning of his acquaintance with Douglass; of his work as a village postmaster and a deputy county surveyor; of his study of Shakespeare and Burns and a copy of Blackstone found by chance in a barrel of refuse; and of his romantic courtship of Ann Rutledge, and his affliction at her death shortly before the time appointed for their marriage.

In the same number the well-known editor of The Railway Age, Mr. Harry Perry Robinson, describes in detail "the fastest railroad run ever made"—the recent speed run between Chicago and Buffalo, when 510 miles were traversed at an average speed of 65.07 miles an hour, and a speed as high as 92.3 miles an hour was attained. Mr. Robinson was one of the official time-keepers.

Mr. Murat Halstead, long editor of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette and now the editor of the Brooklyn Standard Union, relates the history of Garfield's nomination and administration, giving important conversations with Garfield and interesting personal reminiscences. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, in a chapter of autobiography, gives an interesting picture of a New England girls' school at the beginning of the war; and also records reminiscences of Emerson, a guest in her father's house. The feature is Mr. Will H. Low's article on the great English painters of the early part of the century, with many splendid engravings of their pictures. To any one interested in art these discriminating articles are invaluable. The illustrations have been chosen with rare taste; they are interesting as pictures, and as examples of the artists, who are critically and biographically presented in the text. The fiction is especially notable, including a charming romance by Anthony Hope, a pathetic and powerful story by Ian Maclaren, and a characteristic tale from the unpublished manuscript of Robert Louis Stevenson, half fairy story and half fable.

Down Goes The Suit.

The Greensboro Patriot was first to announce that Peter Cobb and wife, Margaret Cobb, as stockholders in the North Carolina Railway Company, had begun an action in the Superior Court of Guilford county to annul the lease of that road to the Southern Railway Company. The Patriot is also the first to announce that that suit has been withdrawn.

"To-day's Patriot says: Mr. and Mrs. Cobb have evidently reconsidered the matter and come to the wise conclusion that their stock in the North Carolina Railway is about as good an investment as they desire and that any action they would take to depreciate that stock now that it is bringing 6 1/2 per cent interest, would be detrimental to their own interests.

To-day they filed with the clerk of the court a retraxit, which effectually knocks the props from under the suit and it falls to the ground. By their action they have put an end to endless litigation before it is fairly begun. It is not likely that the Southern Railway Company will be further embarrassed by similar action.—Raleigh Press-Visitor.

Mal Winder Retired.

NORFOLK, VA., Jan. 22.—General Manger Winder has been retired from the position of General Manager of the Seaboard Air Line, and Mr. St. John becomes General Manager in connection with his duties as Vice-President.

This action is in accordance with an order of the President and a committee of the directors of the line comprising the Seaboard Air Line system. Mr. E. St. John to-day assumes the duties of General Manager of the entire system, in addition to his position of Vice-President.

It is understood that the directors also created the position of General Superintendent, which will undoubtedly soon be filled.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

ACETYLENE IMPRACTICABLE. CONVICT'S FLYING MACHINE.

The explosion in New Haven yesterday, which caused the instant death of three men, was the result of an attempt to construct and operate successfully an appliance for regulating the outflow of acetylene gas from a steel cylinder, in which a quantity of this new illuminant was confined. The experiments in Pfeiffer's machine shop have been going on for two months. It is said that the pressure of the gas in the two cylinders, which were sent from New York to New Haven, was 900 pounds to the inch. Mr. Pfeiffer, it appears, had put the regulator on one of the cylinders and opened the vent, at the same time applying a lighted match to the escaping gas. The explosion of the tank took place instantly, and shortly afterwards the second tank exploded. It is no secret that this gas is exceedingly explosive when mixed with air. One of the New Haven papers published the following interesting information.

The board of underwriters of New York city has formally declined to write insurance on buildings where acetylene is used. This board came to the conclusion the gas in the cylinders is extremely dangerous when being transported. President Morton of the board of underwriters of New York on being interviewed on the matter explained that pure acetylene was not explosive, but when mixed with air it was extremely so. "The Pintech Light Co.," said professor Morton, while experimenting with acetylene gas had an explosion which I believe will be repeated very frequently under similar circumstances. They charged a cylinder with gas with only 90 pounds pressure according to the gauge. Suddenly the head blew out and crashed through the roof, went up into the air, and then fell back, demolishing a chimney. You can see for yourself how unsatisfactory any gauge must be in case of acetylene, for 90 pounds pressure could hardly cause such an explosion. However, I do not believe the calcium carbide, from which acetylene gas is made, can be manufactured at a price which would make it available. It will cost at least $100 a ton. Even if it can be manufactured in such a way as not to be explosive, the cost must be reduced to $15 a ton to be used as an enricher. I will not say that there is absolutely no use for the new gas, for at present it is wholly in the experimental stage."

Letter Writing.

If women sometimes convey their feelings too strongly in their letters it must not be forgotten that men are guilty of the same offense, writes Edward W. Bok in the Ladies Home Journal. There is no man living who would not gladly call back some letter which some time in his life, he has written and regretted afterward. Men are as often swayed by angry passions in their letters as women are by their emotions. The art of letter writing has not been conquered any more by men than women. In fact, a glance over the literature of the world shows that the truest and best masters of letter-writing have been women. And I am inclined to believe this is true to-day as it ever has been. A woman writes a far more natural letter than does a man. She may require space wherein to do it, where a man would employ terseness. But what man ever begrudged a woman an extra sheet, or that inevitable postscript which so often says more than her whole letter. A woman always ignores all formulas and writes as she feels. True, woman may not always be the safest, but it is the most delightful of all the same. It's just the difference between spontaneity and study.

Horse-whipped.

TAMPA, Fla., January 22.—Conductor Melliflesh, who has charge of a Pullman sleeper between this place and New York, was so badly horse-whipped by Dr. N. B. Rhodes Saturday night that his life is despaired of. Some time ago Dr. Rhodes sent his thirteen-year old niece to Winston, N. C., placing her on Melliflesh's sleeper. The child reached her destination almost crazy. When questioned she said when the train left Jacksonville she was the only passenger on the sleeper, and the conductor became very familiar. Finally he enticed her into the stateroom and locked the door. The child began screaming in fright and Melliflesh released her, begging her to say nothing. The child's story was wired to Dr. Rhodes, and he met Melliflesh's train and horse-whipped him, it is thought fatally. The man's face is out to shreds, and physician's say the sight of one eye has been destroyed. When Melliflesh's offense became known, there was a movement to lynch him, but Dr. Rhodes prevented this, saying the fellow had been sufficiently punished.

Let Us Quarrel To-morrow.

My wife is one of the sweetest, little women in the whole world, and I am not considered peculiarly cranky, but sometimes differences would arise beginning with the most trivial things which, however, being duly nursed, became of momentous proportions and often threatened the peace of a family. Of course, I was commonly the one to blame; in fact as I look back on it now, I am sure I was always to blame, for I should have had the wisdom to give way on the non-essentials, and by a little restraint and gentle talk win my little wife over to my way of thinking. But instead of that I feared I should sacrifice my dignity, (?) as head of the family by yielding. So sometimes I went to my business without my good-bye kiss and two people were miserable all day.

But my little wife had an inspiration (most women have when it comes to the breaking point), and the next time our argument was drifting near the danger line she turned aside the collision by this womanly suggestion, "Howard, dear, let's quarrel to-morrow!" This was a proposal for an armistice. What husband could refuse? "All right," I said, "we will put it off for to-morrow;" and we laughed and talked of other things. But to-morrow did not come. Indeed, to-morrow never comes; it's always ahead; and if we only keep our quarrels till then, there will be no more heart-broken little wife at home and fewer "blue" husbands at the store or office. "Let's quarrel to-morrow!"—Selected.

Sleep until You are not Sleepy.

A person may need nine hours out of the twenty-four. Indeed, he is a wise man if, feeling that he requires them, he is sensible enough to take them. Goeth, when performing his great literary feasts, took nine hours sleep.

A full grown adult, in a healthy condition, will seldom require more than eight. If, however, he discovers that he is not sufficiently refreshed by eight hours, he should take more. It is a pretty safe rule to sleep as long as you are sleepy. "There are people," says a writer, "who are wise enough to eat when they are hungry, but who have never attained that higher reach of wisdom to sleep when they are sleepy."

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillotte, druggist, Beaverville, Ill., says: "O Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep house without it." Get a free trial bottle at J. De Morris' drugstore.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough, with the best results." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by W. R. Hambrick & Co. Last Saturday was the anniversary of the big snow of 1857, when the train on the North Carolina road was snow-bound near Jamestown for several days.
