FOUR YEARS MORE OF WILLIAM PRES. MCKINLEY INDUCTED INTO OFFICE FOR ANOTHER TERM.

Taking of the Oath Witnessed by an Immense Throng of Demonstrative Citizens—Vice President Roosevelt Inaugurated in the Senate Chamber—The Parade the Greatest Ever Seen on Such an Occasion.

Washington March 4.—William McKinley, of Ohio, was for the second time inaugurated as President of the United States at noon today, the actual ceremony of inducting him into office being performed at the east portico of the capitol, Chief Justice Fuller administering the oath.

Preceding the installation of the President-elect as President, Theodore Roosevelt of New York was sworn in as Vice President before Mr. McKinley and a very distinguished assemblage in the Senate chamber, Mr. Frye, the president pro tempore, administering the prescribed oath of office.

The second inauguration celebration of Mr. McKinley has been replete with pomp and pageantry. In the preliminary exercises accompanying the necessary formalities and the military and civic demonstration distinguished representatives of other governments, high national and State officials and thousands of Americans of nearly all sorts and condition, have played their parts in producing an ensemble, which, in some respects, surpasses in its display, its gilt and color and glitter, any pageant which has hitherto been witnessed in the national capital.

The ceremonies of this day, introduced and followed by the inspiring show of soldiery and civic organizations are to America what a coronation is to a monarchy; the event is one of the first importance, whether clothed in the garb of colonial simplicity or embellished with all that wealth and art ambitious effort can provide to confer upon the bare formality, the glowing habiliments of a great quadrennial festival.

Those who were up betimes, and there were many, were somewhat disappointed with the early showing in the way of meteorology after the promise of a brilliant morning from the weather man.

At 1 o'clock, however, the skies, after fitful gleams of sunshine, become more heavily clouded, and heavy drops of rain put a temporary damper on the gala day spirit.

The misty rain which followed made the asphalt, too unpleasant for the marchers, but the enthusiasm of both participants and spectators seemed to survive the unpropitious weather conditions, and the crowds remained practically undiminished. The thousands who had come from afar to witness the inauguration display determined to brave the storm in order to gratify their desire to look upon the marching thousands.

Promptly at 10:30 o'clock Mr. McKinley and his party entered their carriages at the White House portico and passed along the driveway out of the east gate, preceded by Troop A. of Cleveland, Ohio. As the President and those accompanying him moved toward Seventeenth street in order to give the escort opportunity to form, there was a hum of applause from the multitudes in the reviewing stands and and flags were waved until it looked like a sea of stars and stripes along both sides of the Court of Honor. The escort having formed in column of platoons, the procession began its progress to the capitol, the President's party, including members of the cabinet, Lieutenant General Miles, Admiral Dewey and the Committee on Arrangements, receiving hearty greeting all along the line.

Having arrived at the capitol, Mr. McKinley repaired to the President's room and from there went to the Senate chamber, which presented a memorable scene, with its assembled diplomats, justices, dignitaries, Congressmen and especially invited guests. Having witnessed the impressive installation of Mr. Roosevelt as Vice-President, heard his inaugural address and the administration of the oath of the Senators-elect, Mr. McKinley was again escorted to the President's apartment in the capitol, to await the assembling of those selected to occupy places on the platform and portico, where the actual exercises attending his being clothed with the authority as chief magistrate were carried out.

If the scene in the Senate chamber was impressive, that at the east portico, which is memorable in history, was even more so. When the President-elect arose to receive his right to administer the affairs of government by making solemn pledge to the American people for four years of faithful service as the incumbent of the highest office within the gift of the republic, there was an immediate hush and heads were bared.

As the President emerged from the capitol for his return to his special reviewing stand in the Court of Honor, he was received by the marshal and his staff and Troop A, of Cleveland, Ohio. The several divisions that were to make up the procession had been forming in their designated places during the inaugural proceedings proper.

Major General F. V. Greene, U. S. A., give the command which set in motion through the capitol grounds, to B. street thence to First street and then to Pennsylvania avenue, one of the greatest military civic parades Washington has ever witnessed headed by a platoon of stalwart mounted police and the Governor's Island band, the grand marshal and staff, the calvary escort, the President and his party followed, and behind them beginning to train the seemingly endless column of soldiers and civilians.

The Pageant swept down Pennsylvania avenue, with its gleams of swords and guns, its shining uniforms, its gaily caparisoned steeds, its marshals and mounted aides, with their sashes of red white and blue, its flags and flowers, between the swaying walls eager sight seeing Americans. As the head of the procession touched Fifteenth street its splendid appearance from the treasury reviewing stand beneath whose golden eagles there was a surging mass of patriotic color, aroused furious applause, which developed into an ovation as the President's carriage wheeled around the corner.

Mr McKinley and his party having reached the President's stand at Executive avenue, he entered the handsome structure embellished with festoons and crimson bunting and enclosed with glass, to review the marching thousands who had assembled to do him honor. After a brief pause the word was given, and the parade immediately resumed motion, passed through the Court of Honor and over the designated route, all of which was hemmed in with enthusiastic and expectant observers.

It was 5:45 when the last of parade passed the President's stand, having taken more than four hours to go over the route. It is estimated 35,000 men were in line.

Then And Now.

Senator Butler broke into Congress demanding a reduction of salaries upon the bases of the selling price of agricultural products. As he emerges, after six years of fat salary and perquisites he introduces a bill to increase the salary of senators and representatives to $7,500. Does it have a back-salary grab attachment, or does it give notice that Buttler has gone over to McKinley's notion that "cheap things makes a cheap man." The transformation of six years is best seen in this bill. Six years ago Butler played to get the vote of the burdened farmer fighting adverse conditions; now he plays for the approval of the followers of Hamilton who despised economy and such simple and old-fashion virtues.—News and Observer.

Raleigh Cor. Newbern Journal: Hon. Locke Craig says the House will have to remain in session until after the impeachment trial ends, as it is found the Senate cannot sit independant of the house. Members of house sit without pay.

There is more Catarrh in this sec. of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, prescribed local remedies, and they are constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a spoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by druggist. Hall's Family Pills are the best.
