HOW IT FEELS TO FLY IN THE AIR.

You Seem to Float, Yet the Wind Roars in Your Ears.

All who have had the good fortune to ride in the aerodrome unite in their description of that first sensation. There is no jerk in starting, though the machine leaps forward with a powerful swoop. Then comes—with some—a brief sense of nausea, a feeling as if the blurred ground were drooping away from beneath.

A slight thrust of the left hand lever lifts the flyer's hand the ground drops away still faster, and then as the machine climbs into the air one's eyes adjust themselves to the proper focus and the surface of the earth below seems to be ripping past at railroad speed.

By this time, says a writer in Outing, you have forgotten the clack of the noisy motor, the flap and whir of the propellers, the grinding of the chain and sprocket gear that drives them. All vibration has practically ceased and you float along with a sense of springy ease and buoyancy such as you can gain from no other means of locomotion. That you are flying fast, you know only from the roar of the wind in your ears and the slight difficulty you have in filling your lungs with air, the same sensation one gets in racing against the wind in an auto.

Then comes the first turn. The machine rises to it, taking its own angle sideways, just as a motor car leans on the banked curve of a racing track. You have no sense of leaning sideways, thought—no feeling that you must tilt yourself as you do when the auto turns a corner, for you sit upright, the aerodrome slanting of its own violation of the necessary angle and slanting you with. A glass of water set on the floor of the flyer could be carried around curve after curve and still not lose a drop.

Also on the same dates examination will be held for admission to the A. & M. College. G. F. Holloway, Roxboro, N. C. Co. Supt. June 15th 1909.

A WISE MOTHER SAYS:

That we should keep up a standard of principles, for our children are watchful judges.

That what are trifles to us are often mountains to our children; and that we should respect their feelings.

That we should bear in mind that we are largely responsible for our children's faults, and be patient with them.

That if you say "No," you should mean "No." Unless you have a good reason for changing a command hold it.

That we should take an interest in our children in small things as well as great, and if we can not tell them what they wish to know, we should say so, rather than deceive them.

That we should interest our boys and girls in physiology, and when they are sick, try to make them comprehend how the complain arose, and how it may be avoided in the future.

That many a child goes astray, not because there is want of care and training at home, but simply because the home lacks sunshine: that a child needs smiles as much as flowers need the sunbeams.

That as long as it is possible we should kiss the children good-night after they are in bed. They will enjoy it even after they profess to have outgrown it, and it will keep them close and loving.

That children look little beyond the present moment. That if a thing pleases they are quick to see it; that if home is a place where faces are sour, the words are harsh and faultfinding, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere.—Philadelphia Record.

Making More Money Out of Cotton Crops

is merely a question of using enough of the right kind of fertilizers.

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers

are the right kind.

The cotton plant cannot feed on barren land. Study your soil. Find out what it lacks. Then apply the necessary fertilization and the results will surprise you.

See what Mr. W. C. Hays of Smith Station, Ala., did. He says: "I planted about 30 acres of some 'gray sandy land' that had been in cultivation for over 20 years, and used 300 pounds of Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers per acre, and I expect to gather 30 bales from the 30 acres." This is why we say it is the right kind. We have hundreds of letters like this, and even stronger, in praise of Virginia-Carolina Fertilizer for cotton.

Get a copy of the new 1909 Virginia-Carolina Farmers' Year Book from your fertilizer dealer, or write our nearest sales office and a copy will be sent you free. It contains pictures of the capitols of all the Southern States.
