Supreme Court Issues Final Trust Mandate.

Washington, June 3.—Final action by the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil case was taken today when it issued the mandate to the United States Circuit Court for the eastern district of Missouri to put the decree of dissolution into effect.

The mandate contained a copy of the decree of the lower court, a reference to the appeal and the appeal and hearing in the Supreme Court.

"On consideration whereof," continued the mandate, "it is now here ordered, adjudged and decreed of the said circuit court in this cause be modified as indicated in the opinion of this court and as so modified be and the same is hereby affirmed, the said Circuit Court to retain jurisdiction to the extent necessary to compel compliance in every respect with its decree."

The mandate concludes with these words:

"You are hereby commanded that such further proceedings be had in such cause in conformity with the opinion and decree of this court as according to right and justice and the law of the United States ought to be had, the said appeal notwithstanding."

High Price Paid for Dirt.

Winston-Salem.—One of the biggest real estate deals of the year has just been closed whereby Mr. P. A. Thompson purchased from the Wachovia Bank and Trust company the lot at the corner of Fourth and Liberty streets, 24 by 100 feet, the price being exactly $40,000, or $1,666.66 a front foot, which is the highest price ever paid here and possibly in the state. Mr. Thompson owns the adjoining property, where his drug store is located, and it is his intention to combine the two sites and erect a modern building with a drug store on the corner, and several high-class offices.

Being Out at Cost.

A CIVIC SERMON.

Judge James E. Boyd Delivered from the Bench at Greensboro Court a Most Practical and Instructive Charge to the Federal Jury.

Greensboro, N. C., June 5.—The regular June term of the United States court convened here today, and will probably conclude its business this week, there being but few important contested cases on the criminal docket. United States District Attorney Holton did not arrive from Winston until noon, but Judge Coble, assistant district attorney, was at the prosecutor's table and kept things going at the morning session. Mr. Charles H. Dorsett, merchant of Greensboro, was made foreman of the grand jury. Judge Boyd's charge was characteristic, being more in the way of a capitol-civic sermon than a dry recital of specific infractions of the United States statutes. He dispensed the evils of monopoly and trusts, in so far as they violated the law as laid down by the supreme court in the two recent decisions against the Standard Oil company and the American Tobacco company, and gave instructions to the jury to do its duty in the premises should such matters be officially presented to them. He then gave a dissertation on "the virtue of contentment," as a caution to the jurors not to be swift in believing everything they heard about the vast superiority or advantage which one class of citizens or one class of corporations had over the average man. God Almighty, for some reason, he reminded them made all sorts of folks. Some were tall, some short, some little and some big, some fat and others lean. One man had robust health, mentally and physically, while others were born sick or tired in both particulars, and others who might be physically perfect, were afflicted mental deficiencies. Some men he continued were also gifted with the capacity of amassing great wealth, while others apparently equally balanced had not this faculty at all. Nature itself, then he pointed out, had for some wise purpose planned these inequalities. It might be for the benefit of mankind as a whole. It certainly often worked out to the salvation of the individual.

The happiest and most blessed man, you will observe, he said, is generally the average man or woman, who with good habits and conservative mind pursues the ordinary callings of life, content with providing sufficient for the support of his family, the payment of his just debts, regular labor of mind or body or both, who can eat with relish, digest with satisfaction as a result of sane living, and who going to bed at night sleeps soundly and awakes next morning feeling ready and eager for the duties of the new day.

You will see that this is so if you think a minute. Look at one of these great wealthy magnates, the agitator calls a colossus of capital. Why should the average man envy him? He can't sleep. He rolls about in his private car or his yachts, seeking something he can't get with all his millions of money and his realms of influence: His digestion is gone. He can't sleep, he wants to eat and tries but it makes him sick. He goes off to Germany and all over the world drinking water, when he wants something stronger but he doesn't try it. The average man doesn't care so much when he dies, for he is so much and often life isn't as much here to him as his hope for something better in the next existence. But your rich magnate cares most for these big things he thinks he is doing in this world and he loves to live and he has him a doctor everywhere he goes, and the least ailment has to be administered to at once, for fear he might die and his faithful omnipresent and well paid physician will surely give him something every time he gets grouchy. So after all those of us who have good health good character, fair promotion, and sane contentment, need go around trying to reform the world and upset and upset nature, by thinking we are not treated fairly, when we see these nabobs bobbing around appearing to have had. These great riches by individuals or by aggregations of individuals, are often gone like the morning dew from them before they die and their fate is intensely tragic their punishment immeasurably hard and severe.

The great public permits itself self corrupted and debauched. condition of affairs has come about in some portions of our country, where hordes of indigestible immigrants are huddled and given the rights of citizens. But these great powers of wealth and organization cannot for long harm a people of integrity because their numbers are few compared with the average citizens. In North Carolina, our people are conservative and as yet God fearing, and if any of these influences can control them, it is because it is their will.

We are called a primitive people here. It is a great compliment to us. We still retain the faith of the fathers about popular government. We are primitive in observance of the Sabbath. Primitive in having the purest original American blood of English and Scotch and German ancestry of colonial days in all this union. And we should be thankful to God for it.

There is more of individual independence of thought and of action, more true American principle of democratic government existent among North Carolinians the state over today than any where else in all this great nation of ours. And for this, not only give thanks, but we should be so reasonably content with our lot, we could not be lured by cupidity, envy, hatred or instability of character, as to depart from those stern primitive virtues that have given us this crowning tribute of being called a primitive people.

What Free List Bill Is.

Upon close investigation the "farmers' free list" bill becomes a mighty interesting measure. It untaxes many articles the farmers use, but it means about as much to all other consumers. It puts 100 articles of common use on the free list and it is estimated that it will save the public some $300,000,000. The measure won't hit the revenues hard, either. The tariff is nearly prohibitive on the 100 articles concerned, so that the custom gets only $1,500,000 from this source.

Twin City Will Vote On A Bond Issue Of $357,000

Winston Salem, June 3.—At a meeting of the board of aldermen held last night it was decided to hold an election on August 8 for the purpose of voting on a proposition to issue $350,000 in bonds. The issue is to be divided as follows: $90,000 for the election of a public hospital and $260,000 to be expended for water and sewer line extensions, school buildings and street improvement.

Camp Jones' Annual Reunion.

Last Saturday Camp Jones held its Annual Reunion. After the meeting of the Camp the Old Vets gathered in the Auditorium and were entertained by the Daughters of the Confederacy. A quartette consisting of Mrs. Lilian Foreman, Miss Huldah Hambrick, Dr. E. J. Tucker and H. H. Masten, with Mrs. E. E. Bradsher presiding at the piano, sang several very appropriate selections, after which Rev. E. M. Snipes offered prayer.

Hon. J. A. Long, master of ceremonies, welcomed the Veterans and made a most interesting address of welcome, closing by introducing the speaker, Col. J. Bryan Grimes. For about an hour Col. Grimes addressed the audience, given them a full history of the Revolution, the Mexican war, and the late war, telling of the many responsible positions occupied in these times by Southerners and the great part the South played in establishing this nation.

After the address the Veterans were invited to a sumptuous repast prepared by the Daughters. As usual this is a real feast and is a part which all of us enjoy, however, it was not our pleasure to be with them on this occasion.

On the stage at the Auditorium was a large cut showing the proposed monument which the Daughters are going to erect in memory of the Old Soldiers. It is a beauty, really one of the prettiest designs we have seen, and we think we have seen nearly every one which has been erected in this State. Everybody spoke in praise of the design and it was the consensus of opinion that the Daughters had made no mistake.

There were about 125 Veterans present, some ten or twelve having answered to the last roll call since their last meeting. There were several present at this reunion which had not attended one of these annuals in about thirty years. It was indeed a great day for the Veterans, much of the pleasure being due the Daughters for their many courtesies.

An Aged Oxford Man Takes Poison and Dies.

Oxford, June 6.—J. U. Patterson, a man about 70 years old, a wheelwright by trade, committed suicide at his home in Oxford yesterday. He bought some strychnine at one of the drug stores, stating that he wanted it to kill a dog.

He took this with him to his shop, where he was found at 6 o'clock in a dying condition. Three doctors were summoned, but could not do anything to relieve him, and he died at 6:30 o'clock. The cause for the action is not known.
