So Fair But Yet So False.

Mary K. Clark.

Feeling satisfied after having answered the notes she decided to take a nap. She tried hard to sleep but could not. It is impossible I can not sleep. Well I guess I can entertain myself for a while reading some of my love letters. She opened a box of letters on the table and began reading them. In this large number were some beautiful letters. They were written by wealthy and refined young men. As she gazed around the room which was filled with the sweet odor of the lovely flowers, she said sadly, "Why can I not love some of them." "I am so fair but yet so false. I don't care, I am going to have my fun".

Soon night came and after eating a light diet she retired to her chamber, not telling any one about her new friends, she kept all of her secrets to herself. Her sisters noticed she looked very bright, and Myra said, "Lillian you are looking unusually bright. What has come over you." She was hoping that Lillian had changed and was going to live a true life, her sisters knew she was a great deceiver of lovers, but still she didn't mind them, she did as she pleased. Her parents idolized because she was so beautiful and thought it was alright for her to have her fun. She was aware that her parents approved of her way of living, so she kept deceiving young men, Elsie would very often tell them that they would some day sup sorrow over this untrue child.

Next morning Lillian was up earlier than usual. When asked by her sister why she was up so early, she calmly replied, "Today will be a busy day with me."

"Why," said Myra, "Guess you will take another long stroll. If I was Papa I would stop you. There is too much romance about you, I am afraid you will never be happy."

Lillian remained in her room nearly all day, and late in the afternoon she dressed in one of her most becoming gowns, took the withered lily from her hair, and placed a fresh one among her curls. She was a perfect picture of beauty, as she stood before the glass she thought, I am beautiful I know I am, so fair but yet so false, I don't care to be true. After thinking for a moment she decided I want to fool the whole world and then I will be satisfied.

Then she heard a foot step, the door bell rang and the servant opened the door and let the three handsome men in, ran to Lillian's door and informed her that she had company. The house girl never thought of telling Myra and Elsie that they had company for they never had much. Nevertheless they were beautiful characters noble and true.

Lillian soon entered the parlor looking bright and gay, she felt there was nothing to mar her happiness. When she entered the room the young men rose, bowing politely, never were they more charmed before. Each one thinking they had never beheld such a beauty. The evening passed away quite pleasantly. Before they made their departure Willie asked Lillian to play some for them. She was a fine musician and had a lovely voice. Robert, the youngest of the three and the most bashful, was now realizing for the first time in his life, that love had found a way into his tender heart. The young men left without making an engagement. After thanking Lillian for the nice music they bade her good night.

She returned to her chamber as happy as a bird. As she was taking off her evening gown her bright mind was full of vain thoughts. "Mercy!" she cried, "How can I flirt with three brothers they will tell each other and betray me and I will get left." Finally she decided she would fool them all if she could. I know I can, my sisters say I am so fair, but yet so false. Very soon she fell asleep and buried her thoughts in dreamland.

Two weeks passed and she didn't see the Messrs. Daviss. Lillian didn't linger in society very much but she grew impatient looking for her new lovers. One beautiful afternoon she decided to visit one of her neighbors, a very dear friend of hers. She called on her friend but had very little to say during the afternoon. Her friend noticed she was unusually quiet but didn't know what the cause was. Her friend hadn't heard of her new lovers so nothing was said of them.

On returning home she found Willie Davis standing at the gate, waiting for her, he loved her dearly and longed to clasp her tender hands within his own. She greeted him with a pleasant smile. Soon they retired to the parlor and he stayed until a late hour, telling her of his undying love. She said sweetly, like all flirts, "You staved away so long, I didn't think you loved me."

"It was impossible for me to call earlier as I am planning for a long trip."

Before they separated Lillian promised to become his wife when he returned. He took her hands and said, "Now, my fair Lillian will you be true?"

"Willie I will ever be true."

He pressed a fond kiss upon her lips. "Now I must say good-bye, which pains me so much, but only six months and I will come and claim you as my own. Lillian tried so hard to make him think she was shedding tears, and he cried like a whipped child.

"Farewell darling I am going to leave you in brother's care. He will tell me all."

Soon the door was closed and he was gone. "Goodness I will now flirt with his brothers, he called me his fair Lillian and yet I am so false."

Next day Willie left for London and told Edgar to take care of his precious darling. He promised his fond brother he would. Several days after his brother's departure he decided he would call on Lillian, he loved her but didn't dare to tell anyone. Edgar knew Lillian was engaged to Willie but as he was so far away he could win her. He knew she was so young her heart would be easily turned. Robert wanted to accompany him but Edgar told him that Lillian was Willie's promised wife and he had left her in his care. Robert was very much offended but didn't say but very little.

Very late in the afternoon Edgar called and was soon telling the fair Lillian of his love for her. For two weeks he called nearly every night, and was nearly crazed with love. The love that had at once existed between the two brothers at home had now turned to hatred and it was so great that they occupied different chambers.

Edgar would often write to Willie and tell him that his little girl he left in his care was getting on alright. Little did Willie think him so untrue. Edgar received a letter from Willie telling him that he was going to return in a few days, and marry Lillian. When Edgar received this letter his heart beat wild with excitement. He answered at once by saying,

My dear Brother:

The girl you left in my care I have learned to love, and she is my promised wife, we are to be married next week.

Your brother,

Edgar.

When Willie received this letter he fainted. After he recovered he told his friends his trouble. Said it was more than he could bare. I love the fair Lillian as I love my life. His friends tried to console him by telling that London was full of pretty girls, but he would not be consoled. I can never love another he said, I do not want to live.

He sat down at his desk and said, "Can it be true that Lillian so fair is yet so false, but I love her. He decided to write while his body was shaking from head to foot.

My dear Lillian:

Why have you treated me so? It is more than I can bear.

His per. fell and he was not able to write any more. He left his room and was never seen again. It was supposed by his friends that he had taken his life but no one ever knew.

(To be continued next week.)

"See my nice square cut waist," exclaimed the girlie, "and my nice coral beads! Don't you wish you wuz a girl?"

Tick Weather.

At one time during a season of heavy fog a London daily paper offered a prize for the best fog story. The following won:

A merchant received a telephone message one morning from one of his clerks.

"Hello, Mr. Smith!" said the clerk, over the wire. "I cannot come down to the shop this morning on account of the fog. I have not yet arrived home yesterday."

Migh Be Misconstrued

The bridegroom had earnestly requested that he should not be asked to speak at the wedding breakfast, but nevertheless he was called upon to respond to the usual toast. Blushing to the roots of his hair he rose. He intended merely to imply that he was quite unprepared for speechmaking, and perhaps it was unfortunate that he had his hand on his shoulder as he stammered out: "This—er—thing has been forced upon me quite unexpectedly!" Selected.

Mr. E. B. Jeffress, special correspondent of the Greensboro News at Raleigh, in his letter to that paper of today has the following which will be of interest:

"Chief Justice Walter Clark is back in the city, but was not seen today. He has just been in the western part of the state and how successful his trip was cannot be learned. There are rumors that Chief Justice Clark is not getting as much support as he thinks he should. There is a little rumor afloat here that Chief Justice Clark feels a little bit sore that Editor Josephus Daniel of the News and Observer, is supporting ex-Governor Aycock in preference to him, especially when the platform of the chief justice as to trusts, initiative and referendum and his general course on the bench has fitted in so well with the Daniels point of view."

In Bad Fix

"I had a mishap at the age of 41, which left me in bad fix," writes Mrs. Georgia Usher, of Conyers, Ga.

"I was unconscious for three days, and after that I would have fainting spells, dizziness, nervousness, sick headache, heart palpitation and many strange feelings.

"I suffered greatly with ailments due to the change of life and had 3 doctors, but they did no good, so I concluded to try Cardui.

"Since taking Cardui, I am so much better and can do all my housework."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

Do not allow yourself to get into a bad fix. You might get in so bad you would find it hard to get out. Better take Cardui while there is time, while you are still in moderately good health, just to conserve your strength and keep you in tip top condition.

In this way your troubles, whatever they are, will gradually grow smaller instead of larger—you will be on the up-grade instead of the down—and by and bye you will arrive at the north pole of perfect health.

COMPOUND CALLOUSES

Tells Splendid Cure for Them and All Foot Troubles.

A compound callous is the secondary stage when it grows inward and presses on the nerves, causing intense pain. Callouses never cure themselves but always get worse, sometimes irritating the whole nervous system. The following is a most effective and speedy cure "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide in a basin of hot water. Soak the feet in this for full fifteen minutes, gently massaging the sore parts. (Less time will not give the desired results.) The soreness will disappear immediately and the callous can be easily peeled off. Repeat this for several nights. A little olive oil rubbed into skin is very beneficial."

This Calocide is a very remarkable preparation for all foot ailments. Bunions, corns and ingrowing nails get instant relief and are soon cured. Bad smelling and sore feet need but a few treatments. Calocide is no longer confined to doctors' use. Any druggist has it in stock or will quickly get it from his wholesale house. A twenty-five cent package is usually enough to put the worst feet in fine condition. It will prove a blessing to persons who have been vainly trying ineffectual tablets and foot powders.
