Increasing Fears That Britain Has Determined To Default War Debts

Great Britain War Debt Situation Suddenly Assumes Critical Aspect

London, June 13.—Complete default of Great Britain's war debt payment due to the United States Thursday was authoritatively stated early today by American sources to be probable unless a midnight cabinet session reached a new decision. The break-up of the cabinet meeting brought no information as to the decision. It was previously announced Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain will report on the debt status in the House of Commons today.

The emergency cabinet session followed hot on the heels of Prime Minister Macdonald's demand before the world economic conference for the immediate settlement of the war debt question. At the same time, it was revealed by a high French official that Great Britain had tentatively offered to pay the United States 10 per cent of the $75,950,000 interest due, but but that this proposal was rejected by the Washington government.

Introduction of the debt issue, economic conference, by Prime Minister Macdonald at the opening sitting yesterday was strongly resented by members of the American delegation. Some called it "bad taste," while other characterized it in stronger terms. The prime minister and other members of the cabinet were attending a dinner for conference delegates when their meeting was hastily summoned to consider the latest Washington communication regarding a British offer to make a "token payment" on the debt.

As the Cabinet met, important American quarters were given clearly to understand that sentiment strongly favored abandoning plans to make any payment whatever. But until the last few hours it had been expected that at least some payment would be made. The 10 per cent offer turned down by the United States corresponds with the basis of settlement on German reparations payments arranged by the Lausanne conference last July. In Mr. Macdonald's speech before the conference yesterday, he asserted the Lausanne settlement must be "completed."

Anxious Moments

American quarters anxiously awaited the final announcement of the debt decision today by Mr. Chamberlain, fearful that outright default might prove an embittering influence, hampering the progress of the world conclave. It was presumed the Cabinet went immediately to work at their midnight session on the terms of a note to be dispatched to Washington. Meanwhile another disturbing element was tossed into the conference arena by Premier Daladier, of France, who warned his colleagues of other countries that the Paris government would agree to nothing until the dollar and the pound had been stabilized, at least in a de facto fashion. The French Premier, insisting on the paramount importance of fixing the relative values of the chief currencies, questioned the practicability of extending the tariff truce for the duration of the conference. "France cannot accept a tariff truce until America and England decide to stabilize," M. Daladier said in commenting upon the position he took in the conference bureau. "We must have a yardstick to measure with," he said. "It is useless to go on here until the British and the Americans take the first step."

The tariff truce initiated by President Roosevelt terminated upon the opening of the economic conference yesterday. M. Daladier said that the bureau agreed to discuss his proposal at the earliest opportunity.

UP at our house we like spring for more reasons than one, and here are four of them. They're all family desserts, too—which is why I especially like them and want to share them with you.
