The Juvenile Court-- Is Favored by the Ladies

The Woman's Club held their regular monthly meeting Wednesday afternoon at the Manufacturers club room with the president presiding. 'Twas one of the fullest meetings of the year, and the reports from the chairmen of the departments showed a great interest and much active work being done along their special lines. The Health Department reported the best meeting of the year. Their sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals was a success, and they have plans for the future which will prove most helpful. The civic department gave an outline of the garden fete to be conducted by them early in March. The reports from the standing committees were good. Many of these committees meeting in regular session as do the departments. Especially interesting was the report from the conservative committee and the legislative committee, the latter reporting special efforts they are making to have the juvenile court established and in view of this they invited Judge Edmonds to present the question to the club, explaining what the juvenile court means to the youth of the town. Business was suspended and the privilege of the floor extended to Judge Edmonds, who in a concise, but clear manner presented the question in a way that sent straight to every woman's heart the awful truth that children as young as twelve years sit in judgment in the same room, before the same curious crowd and are sentenced under the same code that governs the hardened criminal of matured years. The committee will make special efforts for a juvenile court in High Point.

Many communications from state workers were read, and action taken upon same. Its more than likely the club will extend an invitation to a well known club woman and the near future holds a treat for the members of the Woman's Club if the invitation is accepted. As the spring time approaches club life is taking on a livelier interest, and as the term for the close of the club year is made each member seems anxious to accomplish something. The club now numbers 140. During the social hour the Misses Harmon furnished excellent music.

ACCORDINGLY.

This is a joyous world, or a cruel one, according as we fit ourselves into it. There are glooms for us to grouch in with complainings and frowns, but there also is sunshine for us to stride in with a smile and a song.

If you and the world don't seem exactly fitted to each other, don't attempt to make over the world. That's too big a job. Try making over yourself.

Lop off some of your conceit and selfishness, round out some of your vacuums of ignorance, and then maybe you may find some nice little niche just made for you. What you do with it will depend upon yourself.

The world at worst is no worse than we have made it, and the best that we deserve. It came from the Creator clean. Sin came only with man, and has developed into multitudinous forms of vice, error and injustice, but into none more hideous than that of pessimistic cavil.

The plea of the pessimist is necessarily a play upon loosed passions. He dare not appeal to reason, because to reason is to cease to be a pessimist.

What nature often baffles human effort proves no injustice on her part, but only lack of judgment on our own. Nothing is more pitiless than nature when she sees herself outraged or her laws regarded with contempt. The Java horror is but one in millions of illustrations of the fact that nature treats all mankind alike. No one can say that earthquakes or tidal waves treat him with partial favor.

The penalty of ignorance is death, and soon or late, in some way or other, it must be paid by all of us, until mankind shall have lifted itself into perfection of knowledge and judgment.

Time was when famine claimed its myriads, but improved commercial relations have rendered general death by starvation practically impossible. Time was when scourges carried off their uncounted millions, but science has gained the mastery.

For every evil that exists today there is a remedy if man but knew it. Every misfortune, every evil, every sin, every sorrow in this world, since time began, has had its origin in the imperfections of mankind. Nature is severely just. She would, if she could, be always kind.

The Webb Bill

The good citizens of High Point and community will rejoice in the passage of the Webb bill. It only remains now for the president of the United States to sign it for it to become a law. Let every Christian pray most earnestly that Mr. Taft may be led by God to sign this righteous bill. Our Congressman, E. Y. Webb, deserves great credit for his faithfulness and persistence in working for this important measure.

The following is a copy of a personal letter of Mr. Webb to a prominent citizen of High Point. "I thank you for your kind letter of congratulation upon the passage of my interstate shipment of liquor bill through both Houses of Congress. It is a great victory the temperance forces have won—the most important legislative triumph in a half century, if not in the history of our country.

We had a powerful and resourceful foe to fight, sleepless and remorseless, which makes our success all the more signal.

I have been tireless too in my efforts to secure the passage of the bill, and you can imagine my happiness over the successful culmination of a struggle which has lasted for fifteen years. I am indeed proud to have been the humble instrument in trying to carry out the wishes of the millions of good people who have been praying so long for legislation of this kind. I again thank you for your kind words.

With best wishes,
Sincerely yours,
E. G. Webb."

Mr. Webb did not write the above for publication, but with the one to whom it was written I gladly pass it on the public. Righteousness must win.

THAT REBUKE

The House of Representatives took a shot at Charity and Children last Thursday giving us the honor of a very vigorous discussion. Notwithstanding the vote condemning the offending editorial was unanimous, we desire to make it clear that the criticism of the House did not apply to all the members. A goodly number of our representatives are capable men, earnest, faithful and true, but they are in a painful minority. Taken as a whole (and that was the spirit of the editorial which raised such a tumult) the House of Representatives of 1913 is a tolerably sorry aggregation.—Charity & Children.

IN THE SOCIAL REALM

(By I. I. P.)

Saint Valentine's Night.

Hearts true, jilted hearts, hearts of ice, roaster hearts, wounded hearts, warm hearts, bargain counter hearts and hearts of every description were the unique invitations sent out by Miss Linnie Mann to the fifty young folks bidden to the large Valentine party given by Miss Mann to the Delta Tau Club and Misses Veigh and Mary Hutchison of Lexington, who are house guests of the hostess.

The radiantly red color scheme was used throughout the rooms thrown open for the party. In the hall, parlor and sitting room red cut flowers were plentifully and artistically distributed in vases. Mrs. Mann welcomed the guests at the head of the hall.

Miss Frances Mann directed the way to the stairway, where Miss Sallie Gilmer Jones directed the way to the cloak room. The receiving line was composed of the hostess and honorees and Messrs. John Lindsey, Will Schell, of Charlotte, and Dr. Perkins, following the reception portion of the evening, red hearts and pencils were passed and each guest requested to write a valentine verse—the men a comic one, and the young ladies a sentimental one. In this contest Miss Davis and Mr. Pollock won the prizes for composing the most taking verses and Mr. J. Allen Austin made the hit of the evening in the happy little speech used in presenting a bunch of red carnations to Miss Davis, and a mechanical toy—the clown and the heart—to Mr. Pollock.

At many intervals during the pleasurable of the evening couples wandered to the cosy den in the rear of the main hall, which was one of the most beautiful of the several decorated rooms and halls. The walls were hung with a natural wandering of English ivy all glossy and green. Falling from lights—which like all of those on the lower floor were covered with red—and fastened to the four corners of the room were strings of red hearts. These same fiery dangling bits of card board festooned the door facing and garnished the ivy covered table in the center of the den upon which rested the strawberry acid so graciously served by Mrs. Gurney Kearns wearing a white and red gown and red carnations, the same flower decorating the punch bowl and being tied to the four corners of the table with brand red tissue ribbon. The dining room was glittering in its party accessories of brilliant scarlet. Over a back ground of the waxy ivy, numberless red charts ran in riot and festooned the walls and door ways and falling from chandelier to corners of tables, which was lighted by red candles. The center piece was a basket of lillies of the valley and red carnations mingled with asparagus fern. On the four corners of the basket were cupids with their gauze wings fluttering over the always ready deadly bundle securely fastened on back. Misses Frances Mann and Sallie Gilmer Jones served the red and white hearts of ice cream and cake. The evening gowns worn by the young ladies serving also those in the receiving line were bright and beautiful and strongly suggestive of the Valentine season.

Dissolve one cake of yeast in the mixture and add enough sifted flour to make a good stiff batter. Beat until smooth and let rise one hour. Add one teaspoon of salt sifted with enough flour to make a soft dough. Knead well and let rise two hours in a greased bowl. Roll to about three quarters of an inch thick, and cut with large biscuit cutter. Brush over lightly with Simon Pure Leaf Lard melted. Hold through the center and let rise in shallow pans for about forty-five minutes. Bake in hot oven.
