England Will Back Up the United States in the Mexican Politics

PRIME MINISTER ASQUITH STANDING BY WILSON
Asserts Rumors of Attempted Thwarting of His Policy in Mexico Have No Foundation "Assumes" All Interests Will Be Protected.

London, Nov. 10.—The Prime Minister, H. H. Asquith, discussing the Mexican question tonight said that British interests in Mexico "call for vigilant care."

"Mexico," he said "is still in the throes of civil war, but there never was and never has been any question of political intervention by Great Britain in the domestic concerns of Mexico or in the Central or South American States."

"It is no part of our duty to prevent revolutions or control civil wars. The utmost we can do is to give what protection is possible on the coast to British subjects and property."

"There have been rumors that after the United States had adopted a line of their own in regard to Mexico we took a line calculated deliberately to thwart America. There is not a vestige of foundation for such a rumor. We have recognized President Huerta because, having neither the will nor the power to intervene, we were bound to deal with the de facto Government, and because, according to information then in our possession, there appeared to be no element except that of Huerta and his supporters which offered any prospect of the restoration of stability and order."

"That was on March 31. Very shortly afterward, in answer to our inquiries, we were informed by the Government of the United States that as regarded the recognition of President Huerta no definite answer could be given, except that they would wait some time longer before recognizing him."

"Since then there has been no change in policy and no departure of any kind. The change of Ministers to Mexico involved no change of policy."

"We have the right to assume that in whatever policy America adopts she will have regard for the legitimate commercial foreign interests in Mexico, as well as her own. There has been an interchange of views with the utmost frankness and cordiality on both sides."

"Our diplomatic relation with the United States has been for a long time such that with the freest frankness of discussion on all questions that might from time to time arise we both feel the fullest assurance that nothing can happen to disturb our common resolve to attain and maintain a sympathetic understanding."

"It is only right to say that no one in our time has contributed more largely to create and foster this temper between the two great and kindred peoples than our distinguished Ambassador, now once more home among us, Mr. Bryce."

Our Creed
We believe in working, not waiting. In laughing, not weeping. In boosting, not knocking, and in pleasure of selling honest goods.—Blair-Hoskins Co., "The Home of Good Shoes."

TIME BETTER THAN MONEY

(Ford Times.)

There are less than half a million hours in the average man's life—including those spent in infancy, sleep, sickness and at ball games. And only about half this number can possibly be used.

One day Ben Franklin counted up the hours he had wasted in a single month—and by a little arithmetic figured that within the thirty days he had thrown away one one-thousandth part of his entire lifetime. And in that wise old head of his he figured that his supply of hours was limited, while the supply of money depended only upon his industry. He, therefore, concluded that time was something far more valuable than money—and proceeded to use it accordingly.

Soon after reaching this conclusion a customer came into his book store one day, and not being satisfied with the price asked by the clerk for a book he wanted, demanded to see the proprietor. The clerk pleaded that Mr. Franklin was busy in the pressroom. But as the customer insisted, Franklin came hurrying out.

"What is the lowest price you will take for this book?" asked the persistent customer.

"A dollar and a quarter," was the prompt reply.

"What! A dollar and a quarter? Why, your clerk only asked me a dollar for it."

"Right," said wise Ben, "but I could better have taken a dollar for it than to have left my work. The price is now a dollar and a half."

"Yes, but since then you have wasted several precious moments for me—and now I would not sell you the book at any price—for the time I have wasted with your foolish dickerer was more precious to me than all the silver in your pocket." And Franklin wheeled back into the pressroom, while the leisurely customer left the store in disgust.

And thereupon Franklin printed in red, on heavy vellum, in the best of Roycroft style, a motto that would have done credit to Elbert Hubbard—and he pasted it high upon the pressroom wall. It read: "Time is something better than money."

Dwelling Burns

Corner Commerce and Hamilton

An alarm of fire was sent in this morning, when it was discovered that the dwelling house of Mrs. Vaughn, corner Commerce and Hamilton streets was all ablaze, the fire apparently starting from a defective flue. The fire was well under headway when discovered, catching first in the very top of the house. This made the blaze difficult to extinguish but the South Side Hose Company's quick response soon put it under control. The home is that of Mrs. Vaughn, Dr. McAnally's mother and nephew also occupied the house.

Eloquent and Practical Discourse

It was the writer's privilege to hear one of the most practical and help sermons last Sunday morning, delivered to a large congregation at Washington Street M. E. church on the question of "Church Membership." Following the close of the revival services in the numerous churches throughout the city Rev. Barnhardt's subject was well chosen. He took his text from Ephesians 2:19-22, and in part said:

Under the general theme of "Church Membership—Its Meaning and Responsibilities," I propose to discuss one of the most vital and pressing questions of the day. The proposition seems simple enough in some of its phases, and yet it involves certain distinctive spiritual elements which are rooted in the invisible, and are therefore not easily understood at a glance. The ordinary relations of life as between man and man we may understand with some degree of accuracy, but here is a relationship between the believer and Christ which is infinitely deeper than a mere surface attachment, the ultimate result and outcome of which no man can fully comprehend or foresee. And yet, we are not to be deterred from a conscientious effort to find the meaning of that relationship as it pertains to the present life simply because there are hidden and difficult elements connected therewith which the future alone can reveal.

There are many christian people who estimate their church membership at its true value and exercise its functions in a rational and biblical way. But there are many others who seem to have fallen into grievous error in the matter of its meaning. I shall refer to but two of these errors with the understanding that these are subject to almost unlimited variation. First, there are those who make it an end in itself. They look upon the process of salvation as being completed at some time prior to their reception into the church and consider this step as the formal confirmation of that which has already been done. Thenceforth they rest in the conviction that nothing more is to be experienced or achieved until they are admitted into heaven. But however important the initial steps of repentance, faith, and joining the church may be, they are only incidental to salvation in its broadest sense, and the assumption that one may become a finished christian in a comparatively short time and that too by the mere formalities of his adoption into the family of God, is a delusion of satan. When a man decides for Christ and joins the church, he is just then putting himself in the way of life; he is a babe, having the principle of life imparted, but with all the growth to come afterward. Every church member therefore should hold his membership as a means to an end—that he may grow thereby until it may finally be said of him that he has attained the perfect man, "unto the measure of the fulness of Christ."

And then in the second place, there are those who err in the opposite direction; they regard their membership lightly as a thing of little or no consequence at all. And while they have a name to live, they are destitute of any real bond of union with Christ, having the form but denying the power of godliness, and holding their church affiliations of secondary importance as compared with affiliations of a social or commercial or fraternal nature. Such an attitude as that degrades the church into a mere convenience, making it serve the unholy behests of an unregenerate life, and reducing the whole

Post Office Muddles

At Asheboro, Reidsville, Marshall and Laurinburg.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 10.—The next step in the Asheboro postoffice scrap awaits the return to Washington of Senator Smith of South Carolina who is chairman of the senate postoffice committee. The nomination of E. L. Auman to be postmaster, together with the charges against him, refutations, and report of the postoffice inspector who investigated the matter and recommended his confirmation and the charges further refutations since the investigation making a formidable bundle, lay on the table in the senate committee, awaiting the disposition of the committee.

The Other Rows.

Senator Simmons has at last taken up the Marshall, Reidsville and Laurinburg postoffice rows and after going over the matters thoroughly may send for Representative Webb, Stedman and Page for a consultation over the nominations of J. R. Swann, John Oliver and G. H. Russell, respectively, which are being held up. At the present time the appointment of Swann and Russell seem probable and that of Oliver is improbable.

WILL OF AGED NEGRO STANDS

In the matter of the last will and testament of Sallie Taylor, heard before Judge Shaw yesterday, the jury answered in the affirmative, the issue "Is this paper writing propounded for probate and every part thereof the last will and testament of Sallie Taylor, deceased?" The hearing was an action wherein certain heirs sought to break the will of the deceased, an old colored woman who resided in High Point. The deceased left a house and considerable property.

Messrs. Lewis, of Statesville; Powell, of Tarboro, and Hutchinson, who were the guests of Mrs. J. Ed. Hutchinson have returned home.

Not how cheap, but how good is the way to judge a shoe value.—Blair-Hoskins Co., "The Home of Good Shoes."

process of religion to the level of expediency. Contrary to such a view, our church membership, when properly used, conveys a benefit greater by far than we have ever thought or dreamed. So that instead of being a badge of mere respectability or the superficial adjustment of ourselves to certain established customs and practices of a religious kind or as in some cases the calculating effort to secure for ourselves some personal or social advantage, it is the most solemn and important relation possible to a human being.

Now, can the church justify her existence in the world and reasonably claim the support of men? That the church is of divine origin I take it that no one present will deny. And yet there comes into play here a subtle form of unbelief in our daily practice, which is tragic beyond description. I raise the question whether the rank and file of the people today really believe beyond all question that the church is vital to the salvation of the soul? Is its authority divine? Does it contain the ark of the covenant for modern man? Is it the exclusive custodian of the gospel and the sufficient interpreter of the mind of God? Do men need the church today to make them strong and pious and true? There can be but one answer to these questions, and that the affirmative. There are many who profess to think otherwise,
