ONLY A WOMAN'S HAIR.

[Written on a paper containing "Stella's" hair, by Dean Swift. He says elsewhere that she "was looked upon as one of the most beautiful, graceful, and adorable young women in London." Her hair was blacker than a raven, and every feature of her face in perfection. Thackeray's text reads: "A woman above inscription is. 'Did you ever hear or read four words more pathetic?'"]

My packet I've closed—and for label I'll write an enigma there—
Let the die-hard, the curmudgeon,
Hail the denier, the infidel,
To a woman's hair!

"Tis the satyr's bitter mock at the sex
And at love," they'll explain.
But where is the satire, so keen as the Love of a woman's hair?

And where the love so pathetic as that which would fail express?

Embrace me by mimic assumption of slight and bitterness?

It was "only a woman's heart, so unsuited and unaccustomed to the self-sacrifice and self-sacrifice of life,"

For twas I in the pride and ureness of my spirit, who deigned not to kiss

The restraint of a bond such as this

As I was bound to the heart of a woman.

Little seven curl'd you were—"only the frame of my darling's face." You are "only" all that survive of her buried beauty and grace.

The last words of the heart—

String unknit from her level above
And entwining my gross nature with Tendrils of falsehood and love.

Mid the raving of blighted ambition,
The cooing of base despair.

She was "only" solace and safeguard
—and you are—"only" her hair!
