The Shooting of Stonewall Jackson at Chancellorsville. After night fell, Stonewall Jackson rode out with his staff to reconnoiter in front of the line he had completely around in the rear of Hooker and cut him off from the river.

The night was dark and Jackson soon came upon the iron lines. The first shot he fired was a warning shot, as he returned in the darkness, his own soldiers began firing at their commander, of course mistaking his party for the enemy.

When Lee was told that his most trusted lieutenant had been wounded he was greatly distressed for the relations between the two were so much tender. "Jackson has lost his left arm," said Lee, "but I lost my right arm."

THE CYMRIC CHIEF.

At Woodland, Pa., there is a mill where paper is made from wood, and in this mill there is a machine resembling in appearance a large saw.

There through Cameron's mountain peaks and the hills of Wales. Upon a high and beeting crag, far out in long green years of storm and strife a massive castle stood.

So years passed on they lived and loved, they prospered and they died. And at length they stemmed the tide of the Saxons.

Then spoke the chieftain to his wife: "I would I could see the right to live and take my worthless life. But when the Saxons answer came."

Then spoke the warrior once again: "Oh that I could see the right to live and take my worthless life. But when the Saxons answer came."

THE POWER OF INFLUENCE.

Do we any of us realize the power which we possess, either for good or bad—the influence which every one of us exerts?

I never realized so much in regard to it until recently. For many weeks I have been thinking of the power of influence.

I started to tell about the power of influence, the evening a few weeks ago, while sitting with the friend with whom I was traveling in the station at Cincinnati.
