HOW DO WE DIG OUR GRAVES?

We must eat or we cannot live. This we all know. But do we all know that we die by eating? It is said we dig our graves with our teeth. How foolish this sounds! Yet it is fearfully true. We are tormented at the approach of the cholera and yellow fever, yet there is a disease constantly at our doors and in our houses far more dangerous and destructive. Most people have it in their own stomachs, a poison, more slow, but quite as fatal as the germs of those maladies which sweep men into eternity by thousands without warning in the times of great epidemics. But it is a mystery that, if we are watching, we can tell when we are diseased. The following are among the symptoms, yet they do not always necessarily appear in the same order, nor are they always the same in different cases. There is a dull and sleepy feeling; a bad taste in the mouth, especially in the morning; the appetite is changeable, sometimes poor and again it seems as though the patient could not eat enough, and occasionally no appetite at all; dullness and sluggishness of the mind; a desire to study or work, more or less head-ache and heaviness in the head; dizziness on rising to the feet or moving suddenly; furred and coated tongue; a sense of a load on the stomach; that nothing moves; hot and dry skin at times; yellow tinge in the eyes; scanty and high-colored urine; sour taste in the mouth, frequently attended by nausea and vomiting; that nothing moves; with spots that seem to be swimming in the air before the eyes; a cough, with a greenish-colored expectoration; your natural complexion grows pale; the teeth and gums; hands and feet cold and clammy; irritable temper and bowels become up and down. This disease puzzles the physicians and still puzzles them. It is the commonest of ailments and yet the most complicated and mysterious. Sometimes it is treated as common cold, and sometimes as liver complaint, and then again as malaria and even heart disease. But its real nature is that of constipation and dyspepsia. It arises in the digestive organs, and affects all the others through the corrupted and poisoned blood. Often the whole body—including the nervous system—is literally saturated with poison. The only remedy to tell the sad story. Experience has shown that there is but one remedy that can certainly cure this disease in all its stages. Namely, Sinker Extract of Roots or Seigels' Syrup. It never fails but, nevertheless, no time should be lost in trying other so-called remedies, for they will do no good. Get this great vegetable preparation, (discovered by a venerable nurse whose name is a household word in Germany) and be sure to get the genuine article.

Shaker Extract of Roots or Seigels' Syrup has raised me to good health after seven doctors had given me up to die with consumption. So writes R. F. Grace, Kirkmanville, Todd Co., Ky.
I HEARD OF IT JUST IN TIME. "I had been about given up to die with dyspepsia when I first saw the advertisement of Sinker Extract of Roots or Seigels' Syrup. After using four bottles I was able to attend to my business as well as ever. I feel several cases of child and fever that have been cured. So writes Mr. Thos. Pullum of Taylor, Geneva Co., Ala.
WORTH TEN DOLLARS A BOTTLE. Mr. Thomas P. Evans, of the firm of Evans & Bro., Merchants, Hometown, Assomack Co., Va., writes that he had been with dyspepsia for many years and had tried many physicians and medicines without benefit. He began to use Sinker Extract of Roots or Seigels' Syrup about a year ago, and was so much better in three weeks that he considered himself practically a well man. He said: "I had taken this time one bottle on hand, and if I could not get better, I would not take a ten dollar bill for it."

THE JOURNAL.

THE DRUNKARD.

What object is this lying stretched on the road? Can this be a man in the image of God? A man highly gifted: pride, honor and glory. To will and to reason his God given power? But mark how he's fallen, the victim of lust. His pride and his reason alike in the dust. The front of his waistcoat all glossy with dirt. And horrible vermin crawl over his shirt. In rags and in tatters his trousers remain—Patched over and over again. In tatters the jacket still clings to his back. And gray is the hair which once was jet black—His shoes, stringless and shabby, gaping. The soles and the uppers on parting are bent. And his stockinged feet are plainly seen. Protruding from where the uppers have brimmed the hat which he wears on his head. He is being to whom all decency is dead. He'd rather his soul for the means to drink. He is what he seems, a traveling sink. His features are blotched, weather-beaten and old. A load on his stomach, that nothing moves; hot and dry skin at times; yellow tinge in the eyes; scanty and high-colored urine; sour taste in the mouth, frequently attended by nausea and vomiting; that nothing moves; with spots that seem to be swimming in the air before the eyes; a cough, with a greenish-colored expectoration; your natural complexion grows pale; the teeth and gums; hands and feet cold and clammy; irritable temper and bowels become up and down. before the farmer can secure a just compensation for his labor.

It is the purpose of the writer to present some thoughts on what may be called the principles underlying successful agriculture, and he will endeavor to show that farming may be pursued as successfully as the other occupations, if the work is conducted in the proper manner.

Peculiarities of English Life.
Some interesting characteristics of English life are presented in the letter of our special correspondent, F. A. R. They all bear witness to the conservatism of the English. An ancient and fairly homogeneous people, their customs are their own, being founded on their experience and conclusions therefrom. They retain, for example, the custom of morning weddings, despite the repeal of the old law. They retain also the House of Lords—an absolute anomaly in a democratic government. They retain, however, to a fact often overlooked, namely, that to whatever extent democratic institutions prevail in form in England the organization of society still decidedly aristocratic. This does not prevent but rather facilitates the disciplining of disputable peers, such as the Marquis of Albesbury. Very interesting are the views of the venerable Cardinal Manning in respect to the Irish question. In the provinces, he thinks the cause of home rule is constantly gaining strength, (in the cities, proper and just laws, he thinks will contribute to the tranquillization of Ireland. Yet he does not favor an independent sovereign Parliament for that, but a subordinate body empowered to deal with local matters only. It will surprise many people to learn that, despite the continuance of the monarchy, personal liberty in England is better guarded than in any other country. Such at least, it appears, is the Cardinal's opinion, and most Englishmen hold sturdily to the same view.—Baltimore Star.

Muscular Forces.
A strong man with his muscles weighing only a pound or two, lift a weight of several hundred pounds. But, unconsciously to himself, the strong man's muscles of the chest serve in the act of respiration two hundred pounds, fifteen to twenty times a minute.

A bird on the wing is a striking example of sustained muscular exertion. It is not without reason that the Australian swallow, which is never seen to rest, sustains its flight. The English swift flies all day long, and, apparently, in proof against fatigue. An ordinary speaker utters 1500 different vocal sounds in a minute, which gives the one-fifth of a second for each contraction of the muscles of the tongue. Mr. Gladstone speaks on important occasions for four or five hours, and yet his muscles continue to act, till the close of his speech with astonishing velocity.

ASTONISHING AS the velocity of the muscles of the human torso, it is a tortoise's pace in comparison with the velocity of a gnats wings. Its hum varies with the rapidity of its wings' vibrations, and their rate can be ascertained from the pitch of the note. Estimated by this it has been found that an excited gnat moves its wings many hundred times a second.—Youth's Companion.

Don't
Let your sail be larger than your boat.

Press a favor when you see it will be unnewcom.

Build a castle in the air without putting a foundation under it.

Be discouraged by trifles; patience and perseverance will accomplish wonders.

Look down on any one because of physical disability. Milton was blind.

Judge a man by his failure in life for many a one fails because he is too good to succeed.

Snub any one. Not alone because some day they may outstrip you in the race of life, but because it is neither kind nor right, nor Christian.

Forget to speak to a boy because he wears shabby clothes. When Edison, the inventor of the telephone, first entered Boston, he was called a boy in yellow linen breeches in the depth of winter.

Many Don't.
Don't be impatient, no matter if things do go wrong.
Don't give the ball a kick, and send it into the nearest mud-puddle, because it won't go straight when you throw it.
Don't send the marble against the fence, because your best glass ally, because your clumsy finger could not hit the center.
Don't break your kite string all to pieces, because it will not bring you kite down, and you will have to let it go.
Don't throw the stone, if it will take you fully three times as long to get it down afterwards.
Don't give your little brother an angry push and a sharp word if he cannot see the mystery of a marble played off or hoop-rolling with the first lesson. You were once as stupid as he, though you have soon forgotten it.

What in the world would become of you if your mother had no more patience than you? If every time you came to her when busy, she thrust you off with a cross word, and said, "Go away, you are bothering me," would you not cease to think of you; who keeps you so nicely clothed, and makes such nice things for you to eat? What if she were to be so impatient that you would die half the time afraid to speak to her, to tell her about your troubles in school and at play? Ah, how you grieve that mother by your impatience and crossness.

To Cure a Kicker.
The Callistogen gives this prescription its widest application. It is such a loving mother, who never ceases to think of you; who keeps you so nicely clothed, and makes such nice things for you to eat? What if she were to be so impatient that you would die half the time afraid to speak to her, to tell her about your troubles in school and at play? Ah, how you grieve that mother by your impatience and crossness.

She Knew in Whom She Trusted.

Annie was a plain woman, almost ugly, not clever nor cultured, nor rich in worldly goods; but hosts of friends gathered about her as she passed into an old age, and all hurt and ailing and sorrowful folk who knew her came to her comfort and cheer. She never failed them. She always had a courageous, tender word for each person. Poverty came to her, at last, and a painful and incurable disease. She went through sickness and privation, to meet death, with the same high heart and happy temper that she had in her youth and comparatively more prosperous days. The laugh was always ready, and the jest never failed.

"How do you keep up your courage?" a friend asked her, on one occasion.

"I am old enough to know in whom I have believed," she answered, gravely. "When I was young, I was a danger and trouble to my friends, and I prayed to God, but then, when another danger came, I would forget that I had believed in God before, and doubt and fear even while I prayed, but now I am old, I have a record in my memory of these past struggles. I know that He has never yet failed me, and He never will." All young people beginning the Christian life are apt, in the stress of a great sorrow or temptation, to doubt if their Master really hears and will answer their prayers.

"Did ever trouble thee before?" "And he refused to hear thy call?" ask Wesley. And David, again and again, after his many griefs and crimes repeats, "When I tried unto thee, thou answeredst me." But the boy or girl, in the sharp, sore pain of youth, scarcely listens to this far off testimony. It is only when God has answered their own prayers that they, too, begin to know and trust Him whom they have believed.

It is the custom in certain churches in Europe to hang about the altar a scroll which contains the names of the faithful who, in the struggles with sin in which he has trusted in God for help and has been heard and answered.—Companion.

Astride a Wild Boar.
Wild boar hunting in India is an exciting sport, as is proved by many adventurous incidents. The following true incident certainly partook of the unique and adventurous. It occurred in August, 1871, at a place near Nagpore called Warree. A large boar was started, and man and boar each reached a patch of "sindoor," a sort of low growing prickly plant. Here the sportsmen surrounded him, waiting for the boar to come up. This they soon did, headed by old Manjee, a famous hunter.

He forth with waxed valiant, and picking up some clods of earth, advanced into an opening in the bushes, and began his bombardment of the pig's retreat.

A few discharges were sufficient to bring his porcine majesty out, and he charged straight at Manjee, whom he promptly upset, cutting him on his hand. That old gentleman began forthwith to yell "blue murder," only in Hindustani.

On hearing his cries, one of the party named Gung, an Englishman of small size, jumped off his horse, sprang on foot, spear in hand, to Manjee's rescue. That old gentleman promptly scrambled out of the way, and the boar charged Mr. Gung, knocked him over, and began to trample on him.

Mr. Gung, however, was not to be trampled on. He seized the animal by the ears, and scrambling up, jumped on his back! The boar, astonished at this novel method of retreat, reared backwards into the bushes, but a good dig from his rider's spurred dismounted him, and, in less time than it takes me to write it, the rest of the party dismounted, and, rushing in, soon put the boar to rest.

The sportsman in his excitement running his spear right through the boar, and actually pricking Mr. Gung's leg on the off side!

Alligator Stories Will Please Retire.
There is a remarkably intelligent dog in Oxford, owned by one of our sportsmen. The animal is a setter. He positively refuses to hunt birds before October 15th, and no amount of coaxing or whipping will induce him to break the law. He was taken in the field a few days ago by the law-abiding animal couldn't be induced to "set" a single bird.

Finally his master drew an almanac from his pocket, pointed out October 15th with his finger, and the dog, with a joyous bark, went bounding off, and in a few minutes enabled the sportsman to bring home an overflowing game bag—Torch-light.

As brick and stone are now largely used in Japan for building purposes, the government of that country desires to take such measures as will be most likely to prevent the destruction by earthquake, and to this end the Japanese Minister of Education has requested recommendations from various scientific bodies as to the best type of edifice to resist the shocks resulting from subterranean disturbance. In former times wood only was used as a material for the construction of houses in Japan.

This five dollar gold piece you gave me this mornin' is counterfeit," said a vagabond to James T. Brady, the late witty lawyer. "I didn't give you a gold piece, I gave you a quarter, my good fellow." "You meant to give me a quarter, but you gave me this by mistake." "Oh! well, then you may keep it for your honesty!" said the caustic wit.
