SECRETARY BLAINE enjoys the unworthy distinction of being the first member of the Harrison Administration to appoint a member of his own family to the most important office in his gift. He has made his son, Walker Blaine, Examiner of Claims for the State Department. A BAD case of [illegible] with apples occurred on the A. T. & O. Road between Charlotte and Statesville. Rev. Dr. A. W. Miller, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Charlotte, who was a passenger, was [illegible] in the face and on the hands by flying fragments of glass.—Charlotte News.

ONE of the sharpest of Mr. Miller's points was that rich people, who have large money estates, always free traders. It is a pity that Mr. Miller did not put a diamond edge on this point by calling the names of Vice President Morton, John Wanamaker, Jay Gould, Russell Sage, Jay Gould, Whitelaw Reid and the Pennsylvania iron kings, who are well known to be free traders, down to the last man.—Cincinnati Advertiser.

WHAT OF OUR FUTURE.

Taking it for granted that no violent political convention threatens us, let us for a moment consider the future of the South.

Admitting that there are here and there obstacles to her progress, it cannot be denied that brightening skies are bending everywhere.

The iron industries of the South are so far advanced as to justify her claimed preeminence.

The same causes that led to the rapid building of furnaces will lead to the building of cotton mills. Even now the cotton manufacturer of the East is growing equally as anxious as the iron manufacturer of the North, and their eyes are turning to the sun-kissed South where materials form mountains, and vegetation wears the robes of royalty.

It has been said that the great railroad systems of the country have worked to the detriment of the South. They tell us that therefore the cry of monopolies and railroads the Southern press were the principle So there critics. But the railway gridiron lies spread before us. These railways working their way down from the cities of the North and West, bringing with them into the very heart of the Southern States the great staples of trade which formerly came in vessels from New York and other Northern portals from Liverpool and London. Bringing back by way of New Orleans, Savannah, Charleston and other Southern ports, the products we [illegible] the return cargoes of the [illegible] sailed into Southern harbors.

These railroads are the highways but let it be remembered that all roads of trade are the result of changing conditions [illegible] and progress and growth.

The old plan of [illegible] to the interest of the South, as suited its enforced and adverse fallow the prosperity of the past. With the completion of the Nicaragua canal the Mexican Gulf and South Atlantic will be washed with the sails of a prosperous commerce, and rich argosies come trooping into our ports.

PLATFORMS.

Party platforms are not absolutely imperatives. They are the declarations enunciated by conventions to give expression to the principles on which parties propose to conduct their campaigns. Candidates are expected to approve the platforms on which they are nominated, and the acceptance of a nomination while entertaining views antagonistic to their principles, would be a violation of the candor and honesty that always characterizes a gentleman; but a government official has nothing to do with platforms for he is bound by his oath of office.

To use a platform to gain votes, while intending to violate its principles after the election, would be dishonorable and fraudulent; but for one invested with office to rise superior to party, and acknowledge no platform but the Constitution and laws, would be patriotic and virtuous.

If it is true, as has been disclosed, that President Harrison declines to acknowledge the supreme authority of the Chicago platform, it is an act of good and spans the political horizon with the bow of promise. We have seen no indication of a disposition on the part of President Harrison to abandon the Chicago platform. The pleasure we experience arises alone from his profession to hold the Constitution as supreme. Perhaps no man would dare take the opposite position, but the occasion of the President's declaration—thrust upon the attention of a violent partisan—gives it unusual significance.

The JOURNAL has no intention of becoming the eulogist of President Harrison. His republicanism will carry him very far from our standards, but we trust we shall never be so unmanly as to withhold the meed of praise that is always due to virtuous conduct wherever it is found.

No great disaster can come upon the American people so long as the Constitution is preserved in its purity and power.

HARRISON AND THE SOUTH

From current opinion, as expressed in the newspapers of the day, it would seem that the leading purpose of the Harrison administration is to break the Solid South. It is asserted that the consummation so devoutly wished can be secured through the subtle influence of Protection.

There is evident misapprehension why the South is solid. It is not because the South is hostile to the North; nor is it because of burdens of taxation too grievous to be borne. It is deeper than all these. It is a question of blood—which will forever be superior to all other issues.

The edict of the Almighty and Eternal fixed the supremacy of the white man, and no party can dominate these States that attempts to throttle Southern manhood by the forced ascendancy of the negro.

Let the Republican party abandon its special guardianship of the negro and become the champion of American citizens, whatever their race or wherever they are found, and it may successfully compete for the mastery in all the territory of the Union. Satisfy the South that the Republican and Democratic parties are equally national, and that the late Confederate States will be alike honored and protected under Democratic and Republican administrations and the issues that have separated the North and the South will dissolve like mist before the rising sun.

There are those, of commanding ability, who believe that the bribe offered the South in the protection of her infant industries will be successful—and the Solid South be numbered among the things that were.

First, the South must be assured of domestic tranquility. She may accept protection, but it must be at the hands of a party that has local self government as its corner stone. Any attempt to interfere with the unquestioned and unquestionable rights of the States will be fatal to any party in the South.

What effect will the breaking up of the Solid South have on the national parties? Will it benefit the Republicans? In the arena of debate the Democracy hold the vantage ground, and the moment sectionalism is removed the Democratic star will shine as brightly in the Northern sky as it does in our southern heavens.

The race issue eliminated from politics, and all that characterizes Americanism to the front, and a few Southern states may become Republican, but this will be more than counterbalanced by the great Western States wheeling into the Democratic column.

Now let Mr. Harrison show that he has forgotten that Mr. Davis was the illustrious leader of a rival Republic, and remember that he is now and has always been a distinguished American, and the work is accomplished. This may not be said with the lips, but actions speak louder than words, and a revelation can be made, without the compromise of national dignity, that will be only less glorious than that which blessed the vision of St. John on the isle of Patmos.

INDIANAPOLIS will begin work on a monument to the late Vice-President Hendricks in June and finish it in September.
