Lovell, one of Boston's new mills are to be added to the plant, furnity most widely-known business men, was an most widely-known business men, was appropriately celebrated in that city recently. Speaking of Mr. Loveli's career, which might well "point a moral and adorn a tale," eleven he left school and went to work in a cotton factory. One year later his mother opened a boarding house in Boston and John had another year of schooling. With this scant equipment, but with an indomitable determination to succeed in life, the boy of thirteen entered into the arena of life's battle.

"The years that followed witnessed the lad making a noble fight against the dis-advantages with which he was surrounded. After an eventful life in various lines of trade, he settled down to the gunsmith business in the employ of A. B. Fairbanks. to whom he became apprentice at a weekly salary of $2, with $25 yearly a lowance for clothes, and a raise of fifty cents per week and $10 per year additional clothing allowance for each succeeding year until the age of twenty-one. "The qualities which in later years developed the man of large enterprise and unswerving integrity took firm root in the gunsmith boy, and Mr. Fairchild was so gratified with his success that, when John was twenty years of age, the old gentleman voluntarily took him in as a partner with one-half interest. At this time John had not a dollar in the world. which to-day is represented by the great house of John P. Lovell Arms Co., whose business radiates throughout the world. 1841 Mr. Fairchild died and Leonard Grover entering, the firm became Grover & Lovell. In 1844 John P.
