PER PEDDLER'S PERIL.

The sun sank behind the Western mountain peaks, and the short twinght of Southern latitudes came on apace. After a time the man of the house came in. He was tall and thin. Two ferretlike eyes gleamed sharply upon the peddler from amid a shaggy tangle of white hair and beard. He placed his long rifle in a rack over the door, unslung his sho pouch and then seated himself and gazed gloomily into the fire, without vouchsafing either a greeting to the stranger or a word o his own family. Nan, passing by, whispered to the peddler: · Don't ve mind uncle, he's go one of his bad spells on now, but if he ain't bothered it'll pass off by The peddler nodded, and began a tale concerning one of his ad ventures in Texas. He was soon interrupted by Aunt Viney.

"Sit up, stranger," said she We hain't got much to eat, bu such as it is your welcome." The old man ate his supper solemn silence, after which he to his hat and abruptly left the cabi:

"Mose, my old man, hain't bee exactly hisself since the revenou men carried his son John off five ears ago last April. 'Stillin' I s'pose."

"Yes, 'nd top of that he shot ne of 'em while they were tryin' to take him, 'nd they put him in pen'tensh'ry at Nashville for ten

The peddler remained silent for moment or two. But when the dishes were washed and put away e again- entertained the two women by relating sundry reminiscences of his own career, and also describing the wonders of cerain great cities he had visited.

After awhile Mose again stalked silently in and took a seat in a far corner. While the peddler talked be continued to eye him closely as if suspicious that the stranger was not just what he should be. "Speaking of the felephone, continued the peddler. "some folks in these mountains don't be-and making for the door. He seized his rifle as he passed threw a menacing glance at the peddler and once more left the cabin.

"Old man's a little touched in the lead, ain't he?" asked the peddler, who seemed to take no offense whatever at the old man's rude behavior.

"Ever since John was took off he's had queer spells come over him every now and then. I must say he's more'n apt to be 'spishus of strangers when they come around. He's always thinkin' of revenoo spies."

It was Nan who replied, for Aunt Viney was making prepara-tions to retire for the night. When the girl and the peddler were left alone the latter seemed somewhat curious about this son John, who for so many years had been under the ban of the law.

"John was always good to Uncle Mose and Aunt Viney, 'nd that's one reason Uncle Moses takes it all so hard now." "I s'pose, bein' as you're kin em, you must a-felt powerful gal, but John 'nd me was always good friends. "Nothin' more?"

The girl looked at him reprov ingly.
"It's about bedtime," said she coldly. "Shan't I show you where you're to sleep ?"
