Methinks he must have entered there

Won from the strings a nobler strain

Though David's son, yet David's Lord,

And hailed him as her poet king.

For David's harp is with us still,

It daily, hourly sounds again, When thunders from the organ fill

The minister or the village fane

Or gravely read, or murmered low, We hear his words of sacred fire,

Who sang so sweetly long ago.

Yes! in cathedrals vast and dim

The harp of David still is set;

It wakens hallowed echoes yet,

As when he came that far-off day.

A stripling to the palace hall,

and often round some simple hymn and chanted by the white-robed choir,

"Go-find the shepard-lad, that he His tuneful harp may hither bring,
