THE TARIFF.

The tariff question. Much speculation is indulged at Washington as to what will be the action of the President in respect to the tariff. The moment is near at hand, if no action is taken by the President before twelve o'clock Monday night the bill, which was passed by Congress will become a law by constitutional limitation. The President is certainly embarrassed by whatever he does in respect to the tariff. If he approves the tariff it will be said that he is eating crow of a measure and most indigestible to him. If he vetoes it, it will be said that his inaction has permitted the McKinley law and its amendments to pass; and if he neither approves nor vetoes the bill, but permits it to become a law by its own force, it will be said that he has played the coward, and that his much vaunted backbone has become despoiled and has fallen to pieces. It is very Mr. Cleveland's personal interest may be affected, it is not known what the country is to have a rest from tariff agitation, and business resume something of the steadiness so essential to national and individual prosperity. Tuesday morning all will be known, and whether the McKinley law will continue or the Senate bill become the law, it will be the part of patriotism, as well as of self interest, to adjust ourselves to the situation, and move forward in our business pursuits with undiminished energy knowing, after all, that it is personal effort, joined with courage, energy and honest dealing, that gives success.

THE MILL BY THE FIELD.

There are indications of a better day coming. The morning star has appeared, prophetic of approaching light. The humming of the industries as they resume operations will be sure to echo the harmony of the croakers. There is to be no instantaneous transformation. The evolution will be gradual, but the improvement will be permanent. The betterment will not be confined to any section of the Union, but that locality will be the most prosperous whose environments are most favorable and whose people show the greatest enterprise, energy, pluck and endurance. While as Americans we exult at the general prospect, our bosoms thrill with delight in contemplation of what the South will be if her people keep step with the progressive spirit of the age. North Carolina is highly blessed with mineral wealth, but not more so than she is in the stability of her soil, and the fertility of her soil. What is needed here, and elsewhere in the South, is the full utilization of our resources by giving to our own people all the advantages of the situation. The raw materials of our raw materials products ready for the consumer would add very largely to the comfort, convenience and general prosperity of the people. In North Carolina the manufacturing tobacco has done as much for the State and the people as any other industry, and the success that has attended the manufacture of cotton fabrics is a sparkling gem in the diadem of her glory. The day is coming when, not only in North Carolina, but throughout the South, the cotton mill will be in close proximity to the cotton fields, the profits of the field and mill alike contributing to the wealth and happiness of our own people. Apt and demonstrative of the superior advantages which the South offers to this industry is to be found in the greater success of the Southern mills as compared with those of New England. Very few of the Southern cotton mills shut down or even reduced their production, during the business depression of the past two years, while nearly every mill in the east was closed at one time or another. The outlook for cotton manufacturing in the South was never before so bright, as now. In a late issue the Manufacturers' Record says: "The Manufacturers' Record recently announced that several of the largest cotton mill companies of New England would build mills in the South in order to hold their trade on coarse goods. It was stated at the time that, owing to the general financial depression, these companies would not commence active work until there were such signs of business improvement as would enable them to place their new stock to advantage. On last Thursday the first mill to take definite action, the Massachusetts Cotton Mills, of Lowell, passed a resolution to increase its capital stock from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 for the purpose of investing $500,000 in the building of a cotton mill in the South. This is a fine example, unable any longer to meet the active competition of Southern mills on coarse goods, determined to face the situation and build in the South a mill of about 50,000 spindles in order to protect its trade. Such action on the part of the stockholders of this firm means a great deal for the South. It means that every other mill producing the same line of goods as the Massachusetts Mills must of necessity follow suit. The Boston Advertiser in commenting on this, says: "It is an open secret that other large cotton manufacturers in this section are preparing to build similar mills in the south, leaving the present mills for the manufacture of more suitable grades. This is the discounting of conditions which have seemed inevitable for a long time, and towards which the South has been advancing for years."
