several of its contemporaries. The JOURNAL's criticism, the News-Observer has very much mis taken, for the JOURNAL's criticism was that the N.-O's, local and edi torial expressions were very inconsistent, the local editor publishing glowing accounts of Raleigh's develcoment and growth, and its future possibilities, while the editorial col omns were filled with gloomy and dire predictions for the future, with the present conditions represented as being in a chaotic state.

The News Observer could never be accused of being "jubilant" in its editorial columns over the business outlook of the country, for it has determined to see through prejudiced eyes, noting imperfections, discrediting anything that might be called good.

This may be "good polities," but it is not the object of journalism to continually look through shaded glasses, to judge the good by the

If it must be "Peace," or "Calamity." let it be the former by all means, for the wail of the political calamity howler, has been too all persistent during the past few years. Under the ples of "telling the truth" the News Observer has in its local columns dilated on the wonderful building up of Raleigh.

It has issued "special editions" on numerous cities and industries of North Carolina, showing the great development of these, and the possibilities of their future.

Yet at the same time, very often in these same issues, it has edited its telegraphic news columns with woeful scare heads, often misleading as to the subject matter following, and its editorial columns have reeked with lamentations over the present and future condition of business and trade in general.

If the News-Observer is to be a calamity paper let it be one without apology, but to blow hot and cold in the same issue is neither good journalism nor good business.

The News-Observer has sufficient standing and reputation, if it so desires, to be an active agent in restoring that lost "confidence." it so much deplores, and it ought to err rather towards crying "Peace" than to see the other side, and so constantly publish it.

And now the countenance of our esteemed friend the editor of Worchester Advante, is sad and his soul is full of heaviness.
