AN OLD CROCODILE.

One of the most interesting specimens in the British museum is a crocodile more than 7,000 years old. It is a big, well preserved specimen, and of its back there is a whole family of little crocodiles. Years before the Christian era the Egyptians worshipped crocodiles among their animal deities and many specimens were kept at great expense in their parks and royal gardens.

ONE OF TWO WAYS.

The bladder was created for one purpose, namely, to receive the urine, and as such it is not able to do any other duty except by one of two ways. The first way is from inferior action of the bladder. The second way is from careless treatment of other diseases.
