Section One, Tuesday, Aug. 12, 1902

A correspondent of the London Academy says: 'Men beyond doubt, are more theatrical than women in their novels. A great gift, in either sex, is always far less, but among the 'selling second-rate' it will be found that women write honestly, if badly, what they know and feel; whereas men of the same literary rank indulge in stilted diction, melodramatic effects, sham sentiment, false refinement, labored, unreal emotionalism. The woman, therefore, commands a larger public. She is more sincere, and the great good sense of the common reader headless of style, responds to her unadorned earnestness.'

SAME AS OTHER DISEASES.

The seasons of the Tuberculosis Congress have been beyond precedent helpful in practical hints suitable to the layman's understanding. It is well to know that consumption is not properly hereditary and not even easily communicable to persons taking proper precautions; that its allies are intemperance, insufficient clothing, dampness, filth, overcrowding, improper food; that its foes are fresh air, unlimited sunshine, good food, sanitary surroundings. These things are for individual consideration, states the New York World. The appeal of various speakers for more parks and play-grounds, for better homes for the poor and for hospitals where light cases can be cured and hopeless ones prevented from endangering the community should appeal to lawmakers and philanthropists.

GOOD ROADS.

The North Carolina Good Roads Association at Raleigh, announce that they will issue a weekly bulletin for the instruction of the people on the matter of good roads, and the following extracts are taken from a recent issue: 'It is a matter of congratulation that the people of our State have already passed through the stage of education as to the "benefits" resulting from good roads and the desirability of having them in every locality. Probably no person within our borders now would for a moment contend that better public roads fall to promote every phase of human happiness, and that the degree of happiness thereby attained is measured by the state of perfection to which our public highways are improved. It is therefore useless to employ arguments upon that part of the controversy, because it has manifestly been settled in the minds of the citizens of North Carolina. "We are now confronted with the probably more difficult problem of determining the wisest and most practical manner of arriving at a system of road building which will be suitable to our conditions as a people and our roads as a State. The most reliable and experienced road builders agree with one accord that a crushed stone (or macadam) road is the most economical in the end and the most satisfactory at all times. But we must not lose sight of the fact that earth roads or common dirt roads can be brought to a high degree of perfection and be made to yield surprisingly satisfactory results if proper care and attention are given to their location, drainage and repair. "Some of our wealthier counties are spending thousands of dollars yearly for building and maintaining public roads and are "best masters" in the art of road building, yet the infection has not become general in the State, and out of 97 counties, this intelligent modern road improvement is carried on in probably not more than a dozen sections. A person has only to visit Asheville, or Winston, or Charlotte, or Raleigh, or Wilmington to discover that in any section of North Carolina, from the lowlands bordering the ocean, through the more elevated middle section of the rugged, mountainous counties, road improvement to a high state of perfection is possible, and even profitable. He will also be impressed with the fact that improved highways and increasing prosperity go hand in hand.'

COAL SUPPLY DWINDLING.

Discussing the effect of the Pennsylvania coal miners' strike on the supply of and prices of coal for the coming winter, the Coal Trade Journal, July 30th says: "Doubtless the stage is now very near when, to all intents and purposes, supplies of anthracite will be entirely exhausted, and for that reason there is some force in the statement that the operators should consider some means of immediately resuming the mining of coal.

There is received the statement that prices are rising at retail, until, in some of the cities of the New England States the price now asked is 50 percent above that which was ruling at the beginning of the strike. "The quantity on hand in many of the cities and towns where anthracite forms a large portion of the fuel supply is dwindling to nothing, and yet the dealers can only await developments. Only here and there a dealer has a little block of coal, but most of them are entirely out, with the first of August approaching and the time when people begin to order for the winter upon us, and there are not supplies to draw upon, or likely to be in the near future, "Taking into account the month of July, the shortage in anthracite reaches something like 11,000,000 tons as compared with last year, and it is this which makes the heavy demand for bituminous coal, which continues beyond question."

The Fairy Lamplighter.

Affection often inspires ingenuity. In a life of Joseph Severn the narrative of the artist's care of the poet Keats in his last illness includes a graceful incident. Severn, worn out with watching and tireless service, would sometimes drop asleep, and allow the candle to go out, thus leaving the sick man in darkness, which he dreaded. Realizing that this was liable to occur, Severn hit upon a happy device to keep the light still burning. One evening he fastened a thread from the bottom of the candle already lighted to the wick at the top of another unlighted one set ready near by. Not being sure the experiment would succeed, he had not mentioned it; and when later on he fell napping as the first candle was burning low the invalid was too considerate to awake him, but lay patiently awaiting the extinction of the fluttering flame. Suddenly, just as he expected gloom and blackness, the connecting thread—too fine and distant for him to see—caught fire, and a tiny spark began to run along it. Then he waked the sleeping nurse with an exclamation of joyful surprise. "Several Severns" he cried, "Here's a little fairy lamplighter actually lit up the other candle!"

Candy For Change.

"Some people wonder why we carry a stock of cheap candy, penny candy," said the man who keeps the railroad newsstand. "Well, you see, it's this way: I have a lot of regular customers who want it. They take it out in change. For instance, one man has been buying two evening papers from me every afternoon for several years. If he has any pennies, I never see them. He always throws down a nickel, picks up his two papers from the pile and then takes three pieces of candy, which he chews while waiting for his train.
