TRIED TO ESCAPE.

James R. Rogers, moonshiner and U. S. Prisoner makes a daring attempt to escape.

The first day's session of the United States court had adjourned yesterday at 10:30 o'clock and there was the usual confusion around the marshals and the judge's desks incident to adjournment, when Jim Rogers, one of the prisoners convicted under a bench warrant, made a dash for freedom.

All the prisoners were under the surveillance of United States Marshal H. G. Deebay.

In spite of the fact that he was closely watched, Rogers boldly ambled through the large doors leading into the court room and ran down the stairs and out on Craven street closely pursued by officers Dockery, Jewel, Hare and Blackledge and a score of citizens.

Rogers had proceeded but a short distance on Craven Street before he was recaptured. He was only after a desperate fight that he was subdued. It required four men to put him into a cell at the county jail and he displayed wonderful strength and desperation even when the cell door closed upon him.

Rogers is an old offender, having been engaged in illicit distilling all his life. He has served one term in jail but has successfully eluded the officers many times. He and his brother, Nick, are residents of Newport and their escapades are well known there.

Rogers' sentence by the court yesterday was three years in the United States penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., and to pay $500 fine. The sentence though hard is regarded as just by those who know the case.

The other cases disposed of were Ell Williamson, conducting illicit distillery, sentence, $100 fine and 60 days imprisonment.

United States vs H. C. Turnage and Robert Jefferson, charged with removing and concealing spirituous liquors. Not guilty.

United States vs F. C. Henderson, of Onslow, embezzlement of postal funds. Convicted but not sentenced.

United States vs William Crawford, Retailing liquors without a license. Convicted but not sentenced.

A wash-out on the A. C. L. railway at Holly Ridge, below Jacksonville caused a delay of all trains on that road yesterday.

A small audience greeted Henry Blount at the court house last night. Mr. Blount gave passages from Irving's renowned book, "Rip Van Winkle in a very pleasant manner.

The framework in the rear of Mr. Robert Nixon's residence on Craven street was set on fire yesterday by a defective kitchen flue. The assistance of the fire department was called and the blaze put out without much damage.

WASHINGTON LETTER
(Special Correspondence.)

The beautiful floral emblems which several of the public parks throughout the city were decorated in honor of the Great Army of the Republic had a meaning to the survivors of the great civil war that can hardly be understood by this generation. They represented the badges which designated the twenty-four army corps into which the United States army was divided during the last two years of the war. These badges were worn on the caps of the men and were delineated upon the canvas covers of the ammunition, supply and baggage wagons of the various corps. They were emblazoned upon brigade, division and corps headquarters flags in the national colors—red for the first division, white for the second division and blue for the third.

It was a happy thought that gave to the soldiers something tangible to fight and to die for. Before the corps were distinguished their lives in defense of their flag and country, but there was not the fierce rivalry that animated the soldiers of one particular corps in competition with another when they stood in line of battle. While all were fighting in a common cause under the stars and stripes, each soldier felt special pride in his corps. The badge that designated it became an object of veneration and affection.

Long and Short Postage.

"It is surprising to see the large number of letters and packages that are sent through the United States mails daily that bear excessive postage," said a postal clerk the other day. "Most of these are mailed by women, judging by the handwriting, and a day never passes when I'm working that I don't notice dozens of them with from 4 cents to 6 cents in stamps on them when a 2 cent stamp would carry them to their destination.

"It's a good habit, nevertheless, and is probably the result of the many letters which are mailed not containing sufficient postage. However, there is considerably more matter passing through Uncle Sam's postal department daily that contains excessive postage than that which is not sufficiently stamped. This is not a knock on the government, but just an observation on how careless the American people are with their money. Not one letter in a thousand from foreign countries contains too much postage; but, as a matter of fact, frequently they are short of stamps and are watched closely to see that they do not get through unless properly stamped."

Vacancies in the Cabinet Circle.

The cabinet circle, which has possessed an unusual number of attractive young women, will suffer many losses this winter.

Last winter there were eight maidens to take part in the social features of the administration, and even when the daughters of the secretary of state, Misses Helen and Alice Hay, were in mourning there were six. They were Miss Root, the Misses Margaret and Annie Hitchcock, Miss Knox, Miss Wilson and Miss Jones, the young niece of Postmaster General and Mrs. Payne. The marriages of the Hay girls will deprive the cabinet circle of two of its ornaments this winter. Miss Root is in Europe with her mother, and from recent reports from her it is understood that neither will return to Washington for the winter gayeties. The Misses Hitchcock are still in mourning for a near relative. Miss Knox, who is not fond of society, will pass the winter in Europe, leaving her about the first of the year.

Reservation Improvements.

Acting on the recommendation of General Gillespie, chief of engineers, Secretary Root has approved plans for the improvement of the military reservation at the junction of the Potomac and Anacostia rivers, known as Washington barracks. These improvements involve an expenditure of $1,200,000, of which amount $300,000 has been appropriated and is immediately available.

The plans contemplate the removal of all the buildings which have occupied this site for many years and the erection in their places of entirely new buildings of modern design and attractive architecture.

The new buildings to be erected include a war college, an engineer school, two barracks buildings for engineer troops, a general hospital, sets of quarters for officers, a power plant, workshops, stables, etc. These buildings are elegantly situated and are arranged so as to provide two spacious areas for parade purposes.

Diplomatic Set Will Lead.

The new British ambassador has a brilliant American wife, the new French and Italian ambassadors and the new Chinese minister are satisfactorily supplied with wives, orders, attaches and social ideas, and it is apparent that the diplomatic set will lead off in the preliminary pageant of social Washington. Foreigners like publicity, they are not above playing to the galleries, and they assemble in Washington long before the president's wife takes up her official bonnet.

Teddy's Little Lamb.

The members of Captain P. R. Schuyler post, G. A. R., of Philadelphia, presented Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., the son of the president, a lamb named Reddy. The lamb was the son of Reddy, which attracted much attention last year at the encampment at Cleveland, where she followed the procession as the post's mascot.

AN ABDUCTION

A group of British officers were seated in the quarters of one of their number in the garrison at Calcutta. Chester Ashby, captain of dragoons, seemed the most deeply interested.

"It is certainly strange," observed a young lieutenant, "where Miss Blatchford could have disappeared to. That it is a case of abduction there is little doubt in my mind, but who is there who would dare to perpetrate such a crime?"

"I know not, Will," returned Ashby, "but as sure as there is a heaven above us I will find her. Gentlemen, she is my affianced bride."

As the young soldier crossed the parade ground a white robed dandy form followed close behind him. When the two reached a spot where the light which streamed from the barrack windows did not penetrate, the native touched the European gently and whispered:

"Would Ashby still find the lost maiden? If so, all can direct him to where she lingers."

"What! You?"

"Sahib, she is even now a prisoner in the palace of the rajah of Judpore."

"What! In the power of that heathen prince? By my sword, I'll go to the order out my dragoons and tear his glittering robe about his ears."

"Stay, sahib!" quickly rejoined the faithful servant. "If English soldiers were seen about the palace of the rajah, the feeble spark of life which still flutters in the bosom of the white maiden would die."

"What! Would the villain murder her?"

"Sahib, all has said the maiden would die and leave no trace of her death. Listen, sahib. The slaves of the rajah are friends of all, and it is they who have told him of your master's captive. Would Ashby still enter the palace of the rajah unaccompanied save by all?"

"Why does the light of the rajah's eyes? It should bring joy to the heart to be chosen one of so great a lord!" And a lovely Hindoo girl knelt at the feet of Agnes Blatchford, who was sobbing bitterly.

She offered no reply to the kindly meant speech of her companion. Presently the dandy portiere at one end of the saloon was lifted, and the rajah himself entered.

"When will the light of my life cease to gleam and when will a smile adorn the face of her who is loved by the rajah of Judpore?"

Agnes Blatchford sprang to her feet and, turning upon her persecutor, exclaimed: "Never, wretch, never, until she is restored to the home of her father."

The native prince might have made answer had it not been for the entrance of a sable Nubian, who, falling flat upon his face, begged forgiveness for the intrusion.

"Speak, slave. What would you at this time?"

"Most mighty and powerful rajah," said the black, "will it please the son of a king to look upon that which his servant has brought him?"

"The curiosity of the rajah is aroused. Let him see."

The Nubian arose and left the apartment, but reappeared in a moment, ushering in a closed palanquin which was borne upon the shoulders of four blacks like himself.

A sardonic smile played about the lips of the rajah as he stepped forward to lift the rich curtain of the litter. The next moment he started back in horror, with his right hand clasping the hilt of his scimitar.

But before he could draw the blade of the sword of Captain Ashby was at his throat.

"Wretch!" exclaimed the soldier. "Were you a Christian I would award you a moment to make your peace with the Almighty. But, infidel dog that you are, look your last upon these earthly, for your time has come!"

The rajah essayed to call for assistance, but the call died away on his lips, for his eyes fell upon a body of dragoons that were rapidly filling the apartments. Lieutenant Carleton sprang forward and struck up the blade of his scimitar.

"Your pardon, sir! Do not forget and overstep your authority. This rajah is a man in high position. The British government should deal with him."

"Lieutenant, I thank you," returned the captain, with more composure.

It was now that Captain Ashby first seemed to take notice of the girl who had been rescued. Springing to her side, disregarding the presence of his soldiers, the captain clasped her in his arms.

The faithful all had, as he said, obtained the information as to the whereabouts of the young English girl from the servants of the native prince, who, without exception, hated the tyrannical despot. It was he who suggested to the captain to effect the rescue of Miss Blatchford by entering the abode in a palanquin, for he felt that if his master could reach the side of the young lady he could protect her from the fury of the rajah until his soldiers could gain an entrance and come to his support.

Today the happiest woman in India is the young wife of the captain of dragoons, while the rajah of Judpore has been deposed from his high rank and made to pay an enormous sum for his audacity in abducting from her home an English lady.

RIGHTS OF NAVAJO WOMAN

She Alone of All Indian Squaws Enjoys Independence.

The Navajo woman, who has made her name the most famous of all living Indian races by means of her great and excellent invention, the Navajo blanket, occupies a social position of great independence. Her property rights are carefully respected. She owns much of the wealth of the tribe, and her children belong to her alone. A woman may have hundreds of sheep when she marries, and not one becomes the property of her husband. Descent is traced through the female line. It is a survival of the primitive matriarchate.

The Navajo woman has no permanent home. The progress of the tribe has been greatly impeded by its dark superstition that every death is caused by Chinde, the devil, and that evil spirits linger about the dead body. The house is never occupied by anyone whose corpse is buried in the floor and the house pulled down over it, and a Navajo would freeze before he would make a fire upon the floor of one of these deserted huts. So the Navajo "hogan" is a poor, temporary affair, a mere circular hut of logs and stones, with a hole in the roof for the smoke and a blanket for the door. In the summer the Navajo woman loves to move into a brush wicketup, made of greasewood boughs. There she sets up her loom in the shadow of the rocks and lives in the open air all summer.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

RHEUMATISM

Tortures, Cripples and Deforms.

Rheumatism does not treat all alike. Some suffer torture from the very beginning, the attack being so sudden, sharp and disastrous that they are made helpless in a few days, while others feel only occasional twinges of pain in the knees, ankles, elbows and wrists, or the muscles of the legs, arms, back or neck; but this treacherous disease is only traveling by slower stages. The acid poisons are all the while accumulating in the blood, and causing the inflammation, swelling and acid matter, and when the disease tightens its grip and strikes with full force, no constitution is strong enough to withstand its fearful blows, and in a few days the victim is crippled and deformed, or literally worn out by constant pain. Rheumatism is caused by Uric Acid or some other irritating poison in the blood, and this is the cause of every variety and form of this dread disease. External remedies do not reach the blood, consequently do no lasting good.

A CHANCE TO HELP

In Counteracting the Stories About Small Pox Here.

The Journal is desirous of putting an end to the ridiculous and harmful stories that are being circulated around the country relative to small pox in New Bern. Lies have traveled fast and had their effect. It is every citizen's purpose to make some effort to head off these untruthful reports now going broadcast over this entire section.

The Journal suggests this. That inasmuch as there are a number of gentlemen attending United States Court as jurymen and witnesses, and they are in a position to render this city valuable service at the cost of but little trouble to themselves. If while they are here they will investigate this small pox situation without prejudice or fear and when they go home correct the reports, it will help New Bern wonderfully. Considerable good has been accomplished this way already but there remains more to do.

We trust this suggestion will be headed.

"Et Out."

A certain congressman was from a rural district, and as it was his first time in Washington—and, indeed, his first visit to any city of considerable size—the experience of himself and wife were often unique. At home a guest had been something of a rarity, but had only meant an extra piece from the pumpkin pie, a few more doughnuts and perhaps a deeper, by word into the dish of cabbage or beans. It was slow dawning on them that a congressman at Washington is a host at large.

Soon after they had become settled in their new home a friend called on them from the rural district and began to express astonishment at the size of the city and the number of its people, winding up with:

"An' so you keep a girl now, Sarge, an' put your washin' out? Well, well, the look of some people! An' I guess you have callers most every day?"

"Callers?" gasped the congressman's wife, throwing up her hands in dreadful recollection. "I should say so, an' eaters. Mary Ann, Eliza an' mob been at my house in a week."—The change.

The Jellyfish.

The bay of Naples abounds in medusae, or jellyfish, often growing as large as two feet in diameter and weighing fifty and sixty pounds. Some of them shine at night with a greenish light and are known as "jellyfishes" (night lanterns) by the natives. The jellyfish sometimes make migrations in great groups, sometimes so large and so thick as to impede the navigation of vessels, like the floating plants in the sargasso sea of the tropics. These shoals of medusae, as they are called, may be so dense that a place off timber planted in any of them will be held up right as if stuck in the mud, and ordinary rowboats cannot force their way through them. Their migrations have never been explained. They are irregular and occur at no particular season of the year and under no particular influences.

"Sahib, she is even now a prisoner in the palace of the rajah of Judpore."

"What! In the power of that heathen prince? By my sword, I'll go to the order out my dragoons and tear his glittering robe about his ears."

"Stay, sahib!" quickly rejoined the faithful servant. "If English soldiers were seen about the palace of the rajah, the feeble spark of life which still flutters in the bosom of the white maiden would die."

"What! Would the villain murder her?"

"Sahib, all has said the maiden would die and leave no trace of her death. Listen, sahib. The slaves of the rajah are friends of all, and it is they who have told him of your master's captive. Would Ashby still enter the palace of the rajah unaccompanied save by all?"

"Why does the light of the rajah's eyes? It should bring joy to the heart to be chosen one of so great a lord!" And a lovely Hindoo girl knelt at the feet of Agnes Blatchford, who was sobbing bitterly.

She offered no reply to the kindly meant speech of her companion. Presently the dandy portiere at one end of the saloon was lifted, and the rajah himself entered.

"When will the light of my life cease to gleam and when will a smile adorn the face of her who is loved by the rajah of Judpore?"

Agnes Blatchford sprang to her feet and, turning upon her persecutor, exclaimed: "Never, wretch, never, until she is restored to the home of her father."

The native prince might have made answer had it not been for the entrance of a sable Nubian, who, falling flat upon his face, begged forgiveness for the intrusion.

"Speak, slave. What would you at this time?"

"Most mighty and powerful rajah," said the black, "will it please the son of a king to look upon that which his servant has brought him?"

"The curiosity of the rajah is aroused. Let him see."

The Nubian arose and left the apartment, but reappeared in a moment, ushering in a closed palanquin which was borne upon the shoulders of four blacks like himself.

A sardonic smile played about the lips of the rajah as he stepped forward to lift the rich curtain of the litter. The next moment he started back in horror, with his right hand clasping the hilt of his scimitar.

But before he could draw the blade of the sword of Captain Ashby was at his throat.

"Wretch!" exclaimed the soldier. "Were you a Christian I would award you a moment to make your peace with the Almighty. But, infidel dog that you are, look your last upon these earthly, for your time has come!"

The rajah essayed to call for assistance, but the call died away on his lips, for his eyes fell upon a body of dragoons that were rapidly filling the apartments. Lieutenant Carleton sprang forward and struck up the blade of his scimitar.

"Your pardon, sir! Do not forget and overstep your authority. This rajah is a man in high position. The British government should deal with him."

"Lieutenant, I thank you," returned the captain, with more composure.

It was now that Captain Ashby first seemed to take notice of the girl who had been rescued. Springing to her side, disregarding the presence of his soldiers, the captain clasped her in his arms.

The faithful all had, as he said, obtained the information as to the whereabouts of the young English girl from the servants of the native prince, who, without exception, hated the tyrannical despot. It was he who suggested to the captain to effect the rescue of Miss Blatchford by entering the abode in a palanquin, for he felt that if his master could reach the side of the young lady he could protect her from the fury of the rajah until his soldiers could gain an entrance and come to his support.

Today the happiest woman in India is the young wife of the captain of dragoons, while the rajah of Judpore has been deposed from his high rank and made to pay an enormous sum for his audacity in abducting from her home an English lady.

RHEUMATISM

Tortures, Cripples and Deforms.

Rheumatism does not treat all alike. Some suffer torture from the very beginning, the attack being so sudden, sharp and disastrous that they are made helpless in a few days, while others feel only occasional twinges of pain in the knees, ankles, elbows and wrists, or the muscles of the legs, arms, back or neck; but this treacherous disease is only traveling by slower stages. The acid poisons are all the while accumulating in the blood, and causing the inflammation, swelling and acid matter, and when the disease tightens its grip and strikes with full force, no constitution is strong enough to withstand its fearful blows, and in a few days the victim is crippled and deformed, or literally worn out by constant pain. Rheumatism is caused by Uric Acid or some other irritating poison in the blood, and this is the cause of every variety and form of this dread disease. External remedies do not reach the blood, consequently do no lasting good.

S. S. S. goes directly into the circulation and attacks the disease itself. The acid poisons that cause the inflammation, swelling and acid matter, and fill the blood with uric acid, and when the disease tightens its grip and strikes with full force, no constitution is strong enough to withstand its fearful blows, and in a few days the victim is crippled and deformed, or literally worn out by constant pain.
