MAN ABOUT TOWN.

An Effort to Boost On Annoymous Poct Onto the High Mountains of

The Journal has from time to time published warnings that anonymous or ansigned communications would not be We have frequently been forced to consign some really good manuscrip to the obliviou of the waste basket merely because its author was unknown to us. But the Journal reserves the right to suspend the rule and wishes to publish, at least in part, a meritorious piece of poetry. It came to this office last week with no mark of authorship; and no clue to the place of its birth except that the envelope that enclosed it was post marked Newport.

Had this poem been mere rot like some driveling doggerel of Shakespeare or some silly song of Longfellow the Journal would have passed it up without a tear; but we hate to have to turn down such evidences of blooming genius. It may be that as the poet Gray bath said "Some mute, inglorious Milton" may be in these parts. If this be so we want to bemarle, Saturday night. The boat was do what we can to help the unknown There will be an excursion to Wilming on its way from Abels Bay, Hyde Co, to writer up the ragged mountain of

> This literary master piece which we have the pleasure of publishing for the first time is intitled "The Cracker Boy." It is written on two sheets of legal cap paper which are sewed together probably so that we may not lose the thread of the plot. The whole paper measures 41 inches in length and there are 20 but we believe we can give the reader a small idea of this rare poetical gem. A few comments by the way may help to digest this piece of art.

"The Cracker Boy" seems to be writing an antobiography and he starts out thus:

'My friends in North Corolina are My foes they are few

The flattering words they speak of me Thrills my heart threw and threw." Stuck on himself, isn't he? The orthography is just as we take it from the original copy.

They say I am a drunkard And eat chickens on the sly But remember boys I will make things rite

With pure old Maryland rye." We are sorry the real cause of this effusion developed so early in the song but critics can not have their way any more than other people. As to the author's claim claim to mortyrdom he is

'My Southern brother was formilly ac-entitled to much sympathy.

And seven years it had been When he returned to his North Carolina

And made things strait with-old gin."

Here booze is again a subject for en occasion of the State Convention there, logium. He also makes his relatives but Beech Grove is not quite up with suffer with him. In another verse he

He leaves those he calls his "North side friends" and pays his respects to his "South side friends:"

"My South side friends tried to swamp

But trying was in vain. For that very same crowd that seem day Got caught out in the rain, Thats what the got for playing a dirty trick: It served 'em right. After which some one was taken ill

Yes, almost seriously sick That makes us think that in their plans

There must have been tricks." The doctor then was summoned To cure that dreadful pain

Caused by a deep seated cold

Contracted by being out in the rain.' These verses apparently caught cold then too.

There are many more verses of the same tenor and thought but we think this a sufficient infliction on the reading public and presume the purposes of the poet are realized inasmuch as his request to publish has been obeyed.
