WHEN WILL GOVERNMENT END ITS WALL STREET ALLIANCE?

For so long a time has the government at Washington been the financial backbone to the speculative interests in Wall Street, New York, that these interests have come to regard the Federal treasury as theirs, to use in every time of money distress, to further their speculative schemes. The reports from Wall Street indicate again financial distress. The fact that millions upon millions of dollars of new stocks are being issued, and with every kind of inducement offered to the public, shows an inflated condition, and yet because new stock issues of water, and old stocks at greatly advanced price are not eagerly taken by outsiders, the holders of stocks, the manipulators of "pools," and promoters of Wall Street speculation, finding the market dull, and money scarce for their speculative schemes are again crying for their ally, the Secretary of the United States Treasury to hand out millions of gold, so that speculative interest may be revived, outsiders deluded into buying worthless stocks, and the Wall Street crowd can sell out.

Wall Street speculation in stocks is legitimate, because of the original principle of buying and selling actual property. While actual property may change hands today in that market, the original basis of the honesty and openness of the transaction has passed. Pool rooms and gambling houses are closed by the police, because these places are presumably dishonest. But will an outone of these places, than he would be in Wall Street? Is there a greater show to win in Wall Street, as against roulette or poker or any gambling game?

And yet the government at Washington hastens to assist the stock brokers, when money gets "tight." Why cannot the bucket shops ask government gold, when the market goes against them ' Of course such a proposition is "terrible" to think of, the bucket shop is such a wicked institution! What is there to make Wall Street speculation and its promotion of such a character. as to call for government intervention in its behalf, at all times? Is there a legitimate dollar added to the country's wealth through Wall Street speculations? Is trade increased, industries promoted, except upon inflated lines, or is a single investor helped through Wall Street?

It would seem as if this country had advanced to a position of commercial esty, when government aid to stock speculation was past When the country's development and prosperity did not need Wall Street manipulation to create fictitious booms to help people a usand miles away. It is time for Wall Street to stand for itself, and not be able to have government endorsement and backing for all it does.

WHAT IS NEW YORK DEMOCRACY?

The result of the Buffalo Convention where the New York Democrats me ion a few days ago, to nomieste a State democratic ticket, is no great surprise to those at all familiar h New York politics. The newsor fight in New York against the at Independent League has made t suppor that Mr. Hearst was weak, The actual condition was revealed when the convention met. It showed a est strongth, which even the antiat faction recognized, and it was that only a few hours and the would be given to Mr.

musi after convention clamor of a to "buls" the Hearst ticket has at. That versithe politician Je-trange reading, not that there should be different democratic opinions and choice of neveral candidates. The anticonvention was legitimate. The enleavors to defeat Mr. Hearst at the convention was regular. But for party mocrats to meet in regular conven tion, make contentions and fight for place, then when defeated to refuse to ablde by the results, it is a kind of ocracy which is not fully understoo by the Southern Democrat. Why hould the New York democrats go into convention, with the avowed or at least understood purpose that the several factions would "bolt" the nomi nations, unless the nominations were to their liking?

The real truth is that Democracy in its essentials, is unknown in New York. The conventions which meet in the name of democracy, and declare for the time honored principles of democracy, stand for no real democracy. Neither nominations or actions will stand the true democratic test. The cry is democracy, but beneath the surface, are trusts, combines, ward heelers, office seekers, and the betravers for money. It is the cry of democracy, to delude, to deceive, to detract from the real purpose-office graft. It is surprising that such alleged democracy is not understood by the Southern Demo

And yet will the South be blinded to accept this kind of democracy, and vote for the men which New York declares are democrats, and deserve the Southern Democratic party's support?

INDIVIDUAL BENEFIT OR

COMMUNITY GAIN ? The "survival of the fittest," however true, considering it from the view point of the evolutionist, cannot be maintained in community up-building, if the application be made that the individual must ever selfishly endeavor to secure all benefits for himself, regardless of his neighbors.

Every community has one or more citizens who seek personal benefits all the time. The next door neighbor and the rest of the community may not be held as enemies, but they are the same thing. They exist as fit subjects from whom all possible benefits may be extracted, and nothing, or as little as possible, given in return. No more terrible or discouraging sight can be seen or found, than a community where its citizens are possessed with this spirit. guests of Mr and Mrs Duff Dunn of Personal aggrandizement commercial- South Creek Sunday last. simply in what it may yield the individ-

Individual survivalism commercially or socially, gains no strength in this day, from selfishness. There may be in special instances apparent successes, but there is no real gain. Individual afforts to profit by every one and every a. m. Republicans are cordially inthing around, often builds up private ortunes which do not hold together for nany generations. Instead of this individual attempt to survive at the expense of others, there should be the desire of the strong to give of their Chill Tonic. You know what 'you are strength to assist those of less strength. It is the spirit of co-operation, that is demanded, so that in community unity of spirit and action, every citizen may come in for help, if help is needed, or if called upon to render help.

Selfishness is not specially characteristic of this age. Indeed there is a continued increase of the charity feeling. Of coffee just a single cup. But there is needed more the charity (N. B. Her mother brought it up!) disposition towards the community at large. The desire to gain forces of all citizens to promote local enterprises, to build up home industries, so that all And with a book there I will find classes may receive benefits, It should be the impulse of every citizen to serve his community so that its citizens may ev er be workers for money, not placed as indicants, recipients of such things, as a favored few citizens may be willing to give, to just preserve life.

The world calls for action and work from the individual, for self-preservation and life enjoyment. But with this dividual effort, upward towards sucess, there is time for thoughts of oth ers. There is opportunity to assist others. There can be personal benefits rained, at the same time there can be unity interests served, and the of personal selfishness be kept lown, which is always destructive upon munity's advance

The Japanese Matting Rush

All the so-called "Chinese matting" sed for covering floors in the United States and Europe is imported from Japan where it is woven in hand looms from the stems of a species of bogrush. This identical rush, juncus effusus is native to the entire eastern section of the United States where it covers thousands of acres of marshy and boggy ground.

Owing to the cost of hand labor the reaving of matting has hitherto remained a monopoly of the Japanese and Chinese. Recently there have been invented and patented in the United States several power looms for weaving matting. The inventors of these coms claim that they can compete sucessfully with hand labor of any country and only wait the supply of suitable and sufficient raw material to begin the manufacture of floor matting on a

In Japan the matting rush is grown as a semi-spontaneous or by-crop along the banks and ditches of rice fields. It has been so grown for many centuries. and has been subjected to a crude kind of selection which has produced special varieties suitable for different classes of work. The American rush never having been utilized has not been improved, but there can be no doubt but be present at the union meeting at and cross breeding the American plant would, in a very few years give imknown

In the meantime the United States Department of Agriculture, has through its bureau of toreign exploration introduced the varieties of rush most grown in Japan. These are to be given a practical trial in the rice growing region. All these varieties come from the warmer portion of the Mikado's empire and are not likely to succeed except where rich soil flourishes. The two plants require much the same kind of soil, though the rush does not require the frequent flooding a nor the same amount of labor that rice does.

In North Carolina the Japanese rush will without doubt succeed on the wet bottom lands of the Cape Pear, Neuse, Tar and Roanoke rivers. The crop when grown on a commercial scale is especially adapted for large farmers who can utilize improved machinery.

The bog-rush, Juncus effusus is a perennial plant related to the lily family. nt related to the lily family. onnial plant related to the my rammy.

Once planted it will bold the ground for a lifetime or longer. The root stocks resemble those of Johnson and Bermuda grasses, and like these grasses the rush forms a thick mat of roots in the ground. The cultivation of a field of og-rushes would consist of little more than an annual scarification of the round with a heavy cutting harrow to break up the matted roots. Sufficient ertilizer would have to be used to enure the largest yield of high quality traw. The harvesting of the crop may be done with mowers or better with elf-binding respers. The annual yield hould be from 4 to 8 tens of salable straw per acre. There would be three or more cuttings each summer, r more cuttings each summ The writer advises every owner of wet land in the oustern section of the state to procure from the United States Department of Agriculture enough plants of the imported Japanese rush to give this crop a fair trial. Such trial plants can be had free of cost by applying to the U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., or to any and soils nor for any but the eastern counties of North Carolina.
