SCHOOL HEALTH AND CHILDREN EXPOSURE

In the local columns the Journal has noted the large decrease in attendance at the Graded School, due to sickness. In some cities, complaints come of poorly kept and ill ventilated school rooms, causing sickness among pupils. In this city, no such complaint can be set up, as the cause for the absenteeism due to illness of pupils.

To the great percentage this year of sick scholars must be attributed, the abnormal weather conditions which have prevailed. Excessive heat and humidity, with continual rains and extreme changes, within a few hours, of temperature are enough to try the most hearty and rugged child. And yet with the abnormal weather conditions which have and continue to prevail, have parents taken extra precautions in looking after the outdoor habits of their children? Some parents may be indignant, if it was suggested, that they should seek to keep their children indoors, when the weather was rainy. Or advise their children to avoid over exercise and heat. It is not necessary that children shall be cooped up to avoid rain or sunshine, cold or heat, in order to be in good health, but it is necessary that care shall be in some measure exercised, and specially so in such seasons as the present, if children are to be kept from sickness.

It does not mean any hardship, or personal restraint on a child's freedom, if the child be taught to observe weather conditions, and so learning be kept practically immune from illness that comes through ignorance or heedlessness. Every child knows through observation, that loss of limb or life, and physical suffering, will be the result if certain dangers are not avoided. Rain or sunshine, look too simple. What if one has wet feet or clothes. There is no harm in lying in the sunshine, or standing with cold feet for an hour or two on wet ground. A cold is easily cured, is the thought, but a broken limb is different, and yet a cold may be the quicker way to death, than even a limb cut off.

There need be no abridgement in a child's amusement, because it is taught to observe weather conditions, and so avoid sickness. Rather there is the better pleasure in life, for it is the sound body which can best enjoy all that can and should go into a child's daily life.

IMMUNITY SEEKING CORPORATIONS

Many great corporations, grown rich through a high protective tariff, or through special municipal and State franchises, have become in their own belief, to be invulnerable bodies. So far as laws or public opinion was concerned, these were unimportant to these corporations. The created corporation, was in its own opinion, greater than the force or body, the people, which was its creator.

The Standard Oil Company has held itself as one of these invulnerable bodies. But when a jury in Ohio a few days ago, found this corporation guilty of conspiracy in restraint of trade, it realized that it was subject to the law. Now it is reported that the Standard Oil Company proposes "to immunize itself under foreign statutes." That is, take up an ostensible business residence in England, and so escape the American "persecution," which refuses to recognize this company as being too sacred, therefore not amenable to law. But law and order prevail as public opinion enforce them, and removal from one state to another, or from one country to another, will not give any corporation the desired freedom to act as only a power in itself.

Many railroad companies in this country, which not outwardly, as the Standard Oil Company, posing as invulnerable bodies, yet within themselves, are prepared to take the foreign position stand, when suit is brought against them. In one state there may be more favorable laws or local conditions for a railroad, than in another, so it pleads "foreign corporation," and the person seeking redress, must lessen and weaken his position, if he wants to continue the case. But there are enough people who will not be deterred by any but an absolute barrier, and will often hammer the seemingly impossible obstacles down, in order to give a righteous redress from wrongs committed against them by corporations. And the public are encouraged by such individual acts, and public opinion is aroused to form a solid front, and force the offending corporation to live up to the letter and spirit of the law, as though it was an ordinary citizen.

It may appear that money in sufficient amount can gain an immunity from any misdemeanor or crime. It may in some cases, but there is a public honesty which refuses to accept the bribe, or can see in a money payment the just offset and equivalent for violation of the law. There may seem the possibility of immunity from the law's force by removal or money buying silence. But it is precarious and hazardous. The only safety is obedience to law, for in the law's observance is found immunity itself.

TARIFF REVISION PER TARIFF BENEFICIARIES.

In all the discussion on tariff revision, which simply means subsidizing special trust interests, the only proposition offered is to have a tariff revision, when those who are enjoying tariff protection shall no longer ask it! And when in a few well protected manufacturer going to seek political assistance, to deprive him of the fat extras, that the tariff let's him enjoy? If it had not been for the sufferers, the consumers, of highly protected manufacturers, who unable to stand the strain in way of excessive cost, openly revolting and threatening the complete overthrow of the entire tariff system there would never have been any tariff revision. The once called "infant industries" were grown and strong, but the good which gave them such tremendous growth was still to their liking, and the consumer has been appealed to year after year, to stand by the laboring man, and not put down the splendid tariff wall, which only stood between the American laborer, and the millions of laborers of foreign countries whose pay was far below the American labor worth. And yet the American laborer at the same time was paying the cost, in the high price which every tariff protected article he had to buy for personal use or consumption. The laborer who is deceived by the tariff logic of the trusts, must blame his own ignorance, and work on, paying the cost.

And yet more tariff reductions are wanted and demanded. To this is set up the plea, that those who seek tariff revision, do not know what they ask, that the friends of tariff, namely, beneficiaries, know best when revision will be a good thing, and will then take the work of revision upon themselves. Is there any period at which tariff beneficiaries are going to throw away this good thing? The past has been no such time. And today, tariff revision will only come through the public demand, and a united effort of those who are paying millions into the trusts, getting together and facing down and out, the tariff which has made and is continuing in power, the great trusts of this country, to the destruction of all individual effort, and attempts at personal progress.

MAD DOG CREATES HAVOC.

Charges Through the Streets of Raleigh Biting and Snapping at Animals and Men. Killed After a Chase.

[Special Correspondence]
Raleigh Oct. 23rd.—For a couple of hours last night there was no end to excitement about the wild rush of a mad dog, a large spotted bound through some of the principal streets. So far as is now known he bit five men and a boy. He was chased all night and the police were notified this morning that some boys in the suburbs had killed him with a pitchfork. Several other dogs were shot during the search for the mad dog. This morning all six of the persons bit were treated by a physician. One of them, the twelve year old boy is badly bitten in the arm. He was on his way home with some bundles for his mother, was attacked and bitten while on Fayetteville street, in front of the post office. John King, a fireman on the Raleigh and Southport road, was the first man attacked, and he was bitten in the thigh. The doctor gave the patients anti-serum and cauterized the wounds. He said no bad developments had been noticed but of course it could not be told what might happen. Several dogs were bitten and the doctor notified the authorities that these ought to be killed at once.
