The Real Source of The Improvement In Literary Taste.

Speaking of Literary matters, has it ever occurred to you that it is neither Mr. Carnegie's libraries, nor the improvement in the public school system, nor the manipulation of public prints, which is responsible for the steady improvement for the literary taste of the times, but the barbe shop? A few years ago, while you waited for a shave, you had to read the Police Gazette, or some other print devoted chiefly to the heroic dongs and engaging personalities of em inent pugilists. Now, only the best weekly publications are petronised by the "tonsorial artists" and you find Puck, Colliar's, Life, the Saturdaay Evening Post, and so forth. Gradual-ty the barber—who has bad from time emorial a talent for gather and imparting information—has taken the education of the public in hand; the influence has apread from the Barber Shop to the Home, and we are in a fair way to become an calight-ened people, if whose literary tanta even the American anthors who pre-fer to live abroad need not be autum-ed.
