SWINGING THE ARMS.

The Habit a Relie of the Time When

Sir Victor Horsley, is turing before the Medical society of London, ex plained our habit of awleging the arms when walking, which he stated was quite unnecessary, as a relic of the Then we had to use arms as well as legs. Although their use serves no legs. Although their use serves no purpose when walking upright, we still keep on moving all four limbs alternately or in progression. Sir Victor set forth some new facts concerning the functions of the cerebellum, the mysterious and little understood hind part of the brain.

"Primarily the cerebellum must be received."

regarded." said the lecturer, "as a sen-sory organ which has an important part in the correct performance of many of our automatic actions. Walk ing, standing and running are good examples of such actions, which can-not be accurately carried out without Newborn animals cannot stand. They sprawl, and before they can stand walk or run they must acquire this power. For conveniences in life this ability to stand must be secured with out the animal having consciously to think what he is doing. The fully de-veloped cerebellum supplies this power

In proof of this Sir Victor pointed out that the cerebellam of a ful grown cat showed fully developed cells and fibers, whereas in newborn kit tens the brain in the cenebellar portion is not yet organized into active nerve tissues. - New York Times.

DIVING BELL SPIDERS.

Cathering Air For Use In Working

Under Water. The diving bell spiders gather air se just as a soldier might draw wa ter and dispose it about his person it water bottles. They do this in two ways, one of which is characteristic of many of the creatures which live both in and out of the water, as the spider does. The tall of the spider is my ered with black velvery hair. Putting its tail out of the vater. It collect much air in the interstices of the velvet. It then descends, when all this air drawn down beneath the surface collects into a single bubble, covering

If we are to believe Thornbury, the wonderful "Burning of the House of Lords and Commons" was almost en-tirely painted after the capvas was hung on the walls of the Royal academy. So certain was Turner of himself at that period that he would send to the exhibition just a laid in sketch. trusting entirely to varnishing days to omplete the scheme.
