"Sure, I'm thinking 'tis nothing at all," he answered readily, with a smile amending, "nothing of any great consequence, that is to say. Permit me to escort ye to your cabin." "I'm not afraid," Mrs. Prynne interlected.

"Faith, I see that, madam. But your maid, now-? Would it not be well to return to your stateroom and quiet her, whilst I'm ascertaining the cause of this trouble? I-promise to advise ye instantly, whether there's danger or not

"You're very thoughtful," she returned. "I'm sure you're right. Thank 700."

He escorted her to her stateroom and left her at the door, remarking its number and renewing his pledge to return in ten minutes-more speedily if possible. He was back in five, with long face.

Mrs. Prynne answered instantly his double-knocked summons and, step ping out quickly, closed the door tight. In the fraction of a second that it was wide, however, O'Rourke saw one side of the stateroom warm and bright with electric light, and sitting there, Cecile the maid. completely dressed, wide awake and vigilant. "Or, if you insist, sir, I pay nothing: reat Britain pays for both of us." "Eh? Yes?" he stammered.

"But see, colonel." He had before then noted indiffer ently that she wore a chain of thin, fine gold about her neck, its termination-presumably a locket of some sort-hidden in the folds of her corsage. Now she quietly pulled this forth, and displayed her pendant, a little trinket of gold, a running grey-

"A King's courier, madam? Youwoman!"

"And why not?" she demanded proudly. "The King's messengers dare many dangers, it's true. But in some of them might not a woman serve better than a man?"

"True enough. Yet 'tis unprece dented-at least, ye'll admit, most unusual. I begin to understand. That "Faith, 'tis yourself that has your courage with ye, Mrs. Prynne! . . of a resolute chin and resolute eyes But good night, madam! Your serv ant!

> "Good night, colonel," she said softly, and as she watched him swing away laughed lightly and strangely. Later still standing outside her door, she sighed, and an odd light glowed deep in her eyes of grayish-green. Sighing again, and with another low laugh that rang a thought derisive, as though she were flouting the man whose service she accepted so gladly, she turned and vanished within her stateroom.

As she did so, the opposite doorthat of an inside stateroom on the same gangway-was opened cautious ly. A turbaned head peered out, its eyes glancing swiftly up and down the corridor. Long since, however, the excited passengers had been reassur ed and had returned to their berths; the coast was clear. The lascar stepped noiselessly out, shut the door without a sound, and sped swiftly forward: a long, brown man with an impassive cast of countenance in which his eyes shone with a curious light.

"We are not brothers for nothing." Rosa Bonheur once wrote in jesting affection to her brother Isidore. And in truth the wonderful, quaint, boyish little woman, with her bright eyes cropped curls and breezy ways, was ilmost more a brotherly chum than a sister to the "Dodore" whom she so dearly loved.

Much of the time on her country es tate, in her studio and among her and mals, wild and tame, she wore the masculine costume which her manner of life required, to wear which she had. with one other woman, a famous ex plorer and archaeologist, received ex press permission from the French gov ernment. Yet this very mannish little person was far from unwomanly in he sympathles, and her latest blography records a pretty incident related by her friend, Joseph Verdier, the lar-scape painter:

"One evening she was dining with me and some friends. Among the friends was a young lady recently married who gave us an account of the furnish ing of her house.
