Food Box Talk.

Vachington, Aug. 15.—Things were with gonuine dog days inaction, when two distinct political sensations within one week shattered the prevail-ing enuli like bolts of lightning. Many members of Congress are still without nuch to do, that they are not without natter for exciting discussion.

The first shock was the culmination of the Sulzer acandal. Practically every man in Congressival acquainted with the New York Governor, who had for many years been one of the pic-tu esque figures of the National Legislature. Having concluded that the Demo-cratic parry in the Senate could afford to take no chances, the Democratic leaders telegraphed to Governor O'Neal their urgent recommendation that he at once call the Legislature in special session to authorize an election to name a senator for the unexpired Johnston term. The prevailing spinion among the Senate lawyers is that the adoption of the constitution amend-ment providing for popular election of senators nullified any existing State laws nuthorizing the governor to apbe re-enacted to be effective.

Therefore, the majority of the Senate Democrata were assonished and angry when they were informed that the Alabama executive had ignored their advice and entreaty and hail proceeded to take the very chance which they had wished to avoid.

The West, which is very much interested in the conservation of human life in the mines, will be largely represented at the convention and mining show. Members of the Congress and other interested men are now arranging for three special trans-continental trains that will bring them in safety and comfort from the Pacific coast to Philadelphia. One of these trains is to start from Los Angeles, another from San Francisco, and the third from Scattle, Wash. These trains will pick up mining men from all the important mining camps in the West. The iron and copper men of Minnesota and Michigan are also planning a special train to the convention and it is expected that at least two trains will be made up at Chicago. The Illinois men are hoping to obtain authority from the State to take with them one of the mine rescue cars of the State, fully equipped with rescue and first-nid apparatus and a crew of trained men,

The great coal companies of Pennsylvania are now making arrangements for a number of their rescue cars to be on exhibition in Philadelphia, - The exposition authorifies have completed plans for a working coal mips in the basement of Horticultural Hall, in which the mining show is to be held. and in one part of the mine there will be a realistic demonstration of the work of the rescuers from the coal companies and the United States Bureau of Mines of the rescuers from the coal companies and the United States Bureau of Mines Two or three of the biggest coal companies in Pennsylvania, that have developed the "Safety Farst" movements will show their methods in moving pictures. Then you tell him that you will use your magic in such a way that you will blow away in one puff any one or any two of the papers.

He will think this is impossible, but of course it is easy or you wouldn't undertake to do it. All that is neces sary is to know how. Suppose your victim says you are to blow away the two outside papers and leave the middie one remaining. In that case you place a finger on the middle one, give a puff of breath, and, of course, the other two papers will be blown away, just as

This and That

"This and that" is lots of fun to play. The trick in this game that must be understood by the two of the com nany who are to take the leading part in it is nothing more than that the word "that" must precede the article that has been chosen for guessing. For instance, one of the two players acquainted with the game goes off of the porch while an article is chosen by one of the company as the object to be guessed. The absent one is then recalled, when the second player acquainted with the game remarks that something on the porch has been touched and requests him to name the

Personal Remarks, The habit of making personal re marks grows upon people, and many are surprised when informed that there can be no greater breach of etiquette. In any place where a conversation can be overheard mischief beyond repairing is often done by remarks concerning the personal affairs of either the speaker or her friends. Usually it is women that make these remarks. Men have to be more careful, for the reason that they may reap the just reward of a knockdown from some one verhearing. Ofter these remarks are made from an overwhelming sense of curlosity. An incident relates a story of a very young girl who, attending a large reception, noticed a most peculiar looking woman standing near and as soon as conventional greetings were over eagerly inquired of her hostess, "Dear Mrs. X., who is that dreadful woman standing over there by the door?" Imagine her horror when the reply came in cold tones, "That is my mother." She fled to a near friend to tell her tale of woe and received then and there a lecture that lasted through life on the importance of keeping her remarks confined to other things than personal matters.

It is bad taste, which means a breach of etlauetie, to ask anything about Everybody in this country knows and anybody in a crowd, whether it be at sings that soul inspiring song, "The a reception, on the street, in a public conveyance or in any case excepting

People are prone to talk about people. not about things, and that is why one woman got the reputation of being "the best talker about the weather" ever heard. She had found it a safe topic and kept herself out of trouble by using all her powers to make it

Our Courtesy.

"There is nothing which so exalts and graces a man in the opinion of others as his politeness and consideration for his wife. Instead of being, several times in London in 1880, was as some informantely feel it, unmanly and weak, it is the highest type of manliness, and to such service of love and respect the woman will invariably respond with all the tenderness and affection of her mature," says an au thorate on eilirette

What a splendid thing it would be it every married man would take that paragraph into his heart and model his manner to his wife open it!

One of the awkward moments a guest sometimes experiences is being a witness of a man's rudeness to his It is not well to play another per- wife. Sympathy for the woman, wrath indicates the man would be discourte ons to all women if he dared-make true manliness. Fault finding about food, criticism over small oversights, impatience over errors at cards-all trivial matters that a man should regard as the accidents of the moment and rise above-make the spectator wonder how the wife fares in the privacy of home. Such things wound and humiliate the wife and lessen her love. Yes, they do. How can she believe in a man's love who will not regard her feelings in public at least? She laughs them off-it is the only thing she can do-or she passes them over in silence, but she knows how other women regard them, and she knows her husband's stock is going below par in their estimation, and that hurts het pride in him.

Rules For the Well Bred.

It is not proper to tuck one's handkerchief inside the open neck of one's gown, making owe of this opening as a place of safety for the mouchoir, and no person who desires to be thought well bred will do it. To pull out ever a handkerchief from inside one's wnist is unrefined. The handkerchief should be kept up the sleeve, which fashion still countenances, or in a fancy bag to match the gown, which is one of the fads of the summer.

Either through thoughtlessness or ignorance some women have a trick of continually fussing at the neck of a low cut waist. They give it little pulls, as if it did not fit comfortably, or hitch it with their shoulders as if they felt out of place in it. Such a movement is most unpleasant, for it not only makes the person who does It conspicuous, but it calls attention to probable defects which were better toncealed.

True Courtesy.

Well bred people are always willing to retire into the background, while those who are not polite demand the foreground. True courtesy is the refraining from hurting the feelings of any one as well as the striving to make those we meet glad that they have had the pleasure
