

Does Your Husband Come Home Tired, Nervous, Irritable?

Physician Says Thousands Of Men Are Breaking Down
Simply Because Their Blood Lacks Iron—Tells How To Convince A Husband That
He Needs

NUXATED IRON

To Help Make
Red Blood,
Strength and Endurance

"Simply because his blood lacks iron, many an American husband who ought to be feeling young, full of health, vigor and energy and in a position to shower his family with every comfort and luxury is actually struggling to make ends meet—a disappointed and discouraged 'old' man who will probably end up in a nervous breakdown or be carried off by his first illness," says Dr. H. B. Vall, formerly physician in the Baltimore Hospital and a Medical Examiner.

"Because man, in the rush and tear of modern life has so little time to think about his blood's condition and is often so slow to admit any weakness, the signs that his blood may be low in iron are often first detected by the watchful, loving eyes of his wife. Does your husband come home pale and fagged out and too tired to do anything or go anywhere? Does he complain about being overworked—the lack of opportunity today—some other fellow's luck? Does he find fault with the food, the home or the young ones' behavior? Does he seem unable for one reason or another to get ahead and make big money as you and he once confidently expected?"

"Then it may well be true that his blood lacks iron, for the men with plenty of iron in their blood are the healthy, strong ones with the keen minds and the physical energy and stamina to overcome all obstacles—make their own opportunities—and force their way to big positions, power and wealth. My advice to the wife who believes her husband capable of big things in this world is to see that he builds up the iron in his blood and for this purpose I have found nothing better than organic iron—Nuxated Iron. By enriching the blood, creating new blood cells, it strengthens the nerves, rebuilds weakened tissues, and helps instill new energy and endurance in the whole system. Nuxated Iron is used by over 4,000,000 people annually—used and endorsed by former United States Senators and Members of Congress—and in many cases to my knowledge, increases the strength and energy and endurance of run-down, nervous people in two weeks' time. If your husband asks for proof that lack of iron is making him nervous, weak and holding him back in life, you can probably convince him with the following test: Have him see how long he can work or how far he can walk without becoming tired. Next have him take two tablets of Nuxated Iron three times daily after meals for two weeks. Then let him test his strength and see how much he has gained. MANUFACTURER'S NOTE: Nuxated Iron, which is recommended above is not a secret remedy but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products it is easily assimilated and does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. Each tablet of genuine Nuxated Iron is stamped as follows: N and the words Nuxated Iron are stamped into each bottle, so that the public may not be led into accepting inferior substitutes. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists in tablet form only.

RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS

TO DISCUSS PROBLEMS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9—The thirty second annual convention of the national association of railway and utilities commissioners began here today at the interstate commerce commission. The association embraces all the regulatory commissions of the country, every state being represented with the exception of Delaware, as well as Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippine Islands and the District of Columbia.

Chairman Clark, of the commission, opened the session which is to last four days with an address of welcome.

Conflicts between state and federal authorities in the regulation of intrastate transportation rates is expected to play an important part in the deliberations of the convention. Efforts by the railroads to make effective on traffic within states the advanced rates granted by the federal commission for interstate traffic have been contested by a number of the state regulatory bodies.

"The state commissions are passing through a trying period," the call for the convention declared. "Selfish interests seeking freedom from state control have waged and are still waging war against them. This association has not and never can have any quarrel with federal regulation in the field of federal jurisdiction. But it resents the efforts of those who seek to curtail the rightful powers of the sovereign states over strictly intra-state matters."

HARDING THE NEXT PRESIDENT

Smithfield Herald.

President-Elect Warren Gamaliel Harding was 55 years old on the day when his fellow-countrymen elected him to the highest office in the republic. His early life was the typical life of one of America's great middle-class families. He was born on a small farm near Blooming Grove, Morrow county, Ohio, which was owned by his grandfather. He was the eldest of eight children and his father was a country physician. He attended school in the winters and worked on the farm in the summers. He entered the Ohio Central College (now defunct) at Iberia, Ohio, in 1879 and was a student there for three years, during the time being elected editor of the college paper.

The country doctor with a large family could not give his son the best advantages, so it was necessary for young Harding to attend school a while and then quit and work awhile. In the vacations he worked on the farms of his father and the neighbors, and at one time, he was employed as a day laborer on the Toledo and Ohio Central Railroad which was building through his county. In 1884 his father moved to Marion, where he is still living, and despite his 76 years is actively engaged in the practice of his profession.

After leaving college the future President taught school, but two years later entered his permanent life work, when he borrowed money from his father and bought the Marion Daily Star.

Marion was then a town of only 4,000 population, and the Star had a small circulation and was deeply in debt. The new editor however loved his job and seems to have been peculiarly fitted for it. He learned to do all the work of a newspaper office with his own hands. In the old days, he was an expert typesetter, and after the introduction of the linotype he became a skillful operator of that machine. The "luck piece" which he has carried for many years, is the old printers rule which he used while he was "sticking type." The policy of his paper has always been to boost rather than to knock, and the wisdom of its management of labor, is evidenced by the fact that there has never been a strike in the office. It is stated that while its owner had been almost constantly in politics since he bought it, he has never used his position as editor to further his candidacies.

Speaking of the success of Mr. Harding as a journalist, the Review of Review says "The Star today is a prosperous money-making plant. It could not be purchased at any price. It has the widest circulation of any newspaper in a city of 30,000 inhabitants in the middle west. It is quoted more often than any other paper outside the great cities."

As the town grew to a city and the paper increased in prosperity and influence young Harding heeded the call of his neighbors to enter politics. He served two terms in the state Legislature, and in 1904 was elected Lieut. Governor.

In 1910 he ran for Governor, but was defeated. He presented the name of President Taft to the Republican National Convention for re-nomination, in 1912, and was an ardent supporter of the regular candidate in the Wilson-Roosevelt-Taft campaign which resulted in a Democratic victory. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1914, securing the nomination over Foraker in the first primary ever held in Ohio for Senator, by more than 100,000 majority. Two years later he was Chairman of the Republican National Convention which nominated Hughes.

It is needless to say much of his record in the United States Senate, as that has been discussed from many a platform and speaker's stand in the last four months. As a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, he constantly and consistently opposed the administration of President Wilson. Particularly he opposed the policy of "watchful waiting" in Mexico, and as the war in Europe progressed he was an ardent advocate for "Preparedness" in America. After we entered the war, he introduced and secured the passage of an amendment to the Military bill, allowing Col. Roosevelt to lead a division, but President Wilson prevented the plan being carried out. When President Wilson announced that America had entered the war to "make the world safe for democracy," Senator Harding was among the first to indicate that America "should not deem herself called upon to reorganize the old world or set up any kind of government in Europe." And he began his fight against the League of Nations, as soon as it was made public in February, 1919, his preference being to consider the Peace Treaty and the League separately.

In a campaign which was to be waged principally against President Wilson's administration, Senator Harding was a logical candidate, although he was not considered the probable nominee, until several ballots had been taken. He was nominated as a compromise candidate on

SAVING AND SPENDING.

Have the majority of the people in the land wasted or saved their money during the prosperous times through which we have passed? Have the people spent all they made or have they laid aside nest eggs for a rainy day? The answers are as diverse as the winds. The Hikyory Record says:

"The Record was talking with two intelligent men yesterday about the so-called unrest in the country and the desire for changed conditions. One of the men remarked that the expenses of his family had increased but little over pre-war days. He thought that a large percent of people had spent all they made, that many had found that they needed automobiles and that their desires kept them agitated day in and day out. He did not believe that many more people were saving money than formerly, although the opportunities for saving were about twice as good as in past years. On the part of people intent on getting ahead, it was agreed, there was very little complaint, but unhappily the thrifty and saving are not the majority in any community."

While the Monroe Enquirer thinks: "Maybe the folks here in North Carolina have been wasting money and blowing it in foolishly, but if they have they must have made a pile of it, for according to the report of the bankers they have added thirty-five million dollars—just think of it—have added thirty-five million dollars to bank deposits and twenty-one million dollars to savings accounts during the past year. Not all the money has been wasted, no, not by

CONSUELO VANDERBILT GRANTED DIVORCE FROM DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH

LONDON, Nov. 9—The Duchess of Marlboro, formerly Consuelo Vanderbilt, daughter of W. K. Vanderbilt, was today awarded a decree of divorce from the Duke of Marlborough.

Allegations of desertion and misconduct were made by the Duchess. Formal denial of the charges was made by the Duke's counsel, but no evidence was taken. The duchess also was awarded the costs of the action.

The charge of desertion was based upon the Duke's disobedience of the order for the restitution of conjugal rights which the duchess obtained last March.

The case lasted only 25 minutes, Sir Edward Carson appearing for the duchess, and Robert Bayford for the duke. Only two witnesses were called—an English detective who watched Blenheim palace, the duke's residence and shadowed the duke and a companion on a trip to Paris, and a solicitor's clerk who witnessed the service of the court papers on the defendant.

Evidence was given that the duke had occupied a room in a prominent hotel in Paris on February 28 last with a woman whom the detective described as "twenty four or twenty-five years of age." The woman was not named.

Unless other proceedings are instituted by the duke the decree awarded today automatically becomes absolute at the end of six months.

"The Right to Love" Second Offering of Producer, Has Prominent Cast.

The photoplay attraction at the Gastonia Theatre Wednesday and Thursday is "The Right to Love," produced by George Fitzsimmons and featuring Mae Murray and Davis Powell. Frank Burgess adapted the story from a popular French play. It is a Paramount production.

Miss Murray has the role of an American girl, who leads a wretched life with her husband, Sir Archibald Falkland, English director of the Ottoman Debt at Constantinople. In an effort to compromise his wife so he may marry another woman, Sir Archibald installs a Prince Stanislaus in his home. A Colonel Richard Loring, played by Davis Powell, arrives in time to rescue her from the Prince, though in the resulting mix-up, Loring shoots Falkland dead. He is acquitted in the trial that follows, and he and Lady Falkland seek happiness together.

"The Right to Love" is declared to abound in beautiful scenes, most of them made in Florida. Besides Mae Murray and Mr. Powell, Alma Tell, Holmes E. Herbert, Maury Harlan and Frank
