BEWARE BIG COTTON CROP.

Statesville Landmark,

Special cort is being made to export cotton, through the aid of the war finance corporation. A million bales sent across the water might revive the price a bit, although with that there is no prospect of the price reaching cost of production. While exportation is desirable, every little will help and a beginning may open the way for better things, a danger to be guarded right now is that with even a slight rise in price and better prospect of a market at the opening of the planting season, the defermination to cut acreage at least 50 per cent may vanish. The only sure prospect for any sort of a worth while price for cotton is an unusually small crop this year. Every farmer knows that experience has demonstrated that the smaller the crop the higher the price. Mr. Wilson McLain, a Robeson county usiness man and farmer, who has been and is yet connected with the war finance. corporation, stated on a visit home a few days ago, that the prospect for cotton is very gloomy; that while cotton is needed abroad, depreciated currency and lack of security readers the people unable to buy. With the big surplus on hand, if any considerable cotton crop is raised this year Mr. McLain fears-and many others feel the same way-that cotton may go to five cents,
