"Do you know Cole Blease," was a question put to Tasso Robinson, a dusky youth who appeared in Municipal Court this morning on a charge of beating a ride on a Southern train and who gave his place of residence as Newberry, S. C. Judge Capps explained to Tasso that Cole was supposed to reside in Newberry also.

"Nawsur," was Tasso's prompt reply. "You see I liss out in the edge o' town and I speefs he liss up town."

Tasso said he was en route to Charlotte where he had a promise of a job totting water with a construction concern with which he worked last summer. He said he had no money.

"Are you a good walker," queried Judge Capps.

"I shore is boss; I walked from Greenville to Spartanburg easy."

"Well," replied the judge, "I'll give you a chance to walk to Charlotte and get your job."

GRAND JURY INVESTIGATES DEATHS OTHER NEGROES

MONTICELLO, Ga., April 12.—After completing its investigation of the deaths of 14 negroes on the farm of John S. Williams in the southern part of this county, alleged to have been killed to prevent their giving evidence of peonage, the Jasper county grand jury today started an inquiry into the deaths of two other negroes, shot to death in different parts of the county.

Indictments charging murder in connection with the killings on the Williams farm were returned late yesterday against Williams and his three sons, Harold, Leroy and Marvin, and Williams' negro farm boss, Clyde Manning.

Doyle Campbell, solicitor general, announced that the elder Williams and Manning would be placed on trial as soon as they are released from the jurisdiction of Newton county, where Williams was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment last week.

Governor Dorsey has been asked to offer rewards for the arrest of the three Williams boys, who disappeared from the neighborhood of their home about 10 days ago. A nationwide hunt for the boys will be instituted, it was stated.
