POET'S CORNER.

THAT'S WHAT SHE IS.

Woman's a creature of so beautiful a
meine,

That to be loved needs but to be seen,
And seen too oft, familiar with her taste,
At first we compliment, then kiss her,
then embrace. V.

ADVICE TO THE TAR HEEL POET.

Vex not thou our Tommie's mind
With thy shallow wit,
Vex not thou our Tommie's mind
Thou canst not fathom it;
Its vagaries are far beyond thy pen,
'Tis not as the mind of common men,
Nay rather as fitful as the wind.

Thou would-be-sneerer come not near
For thee he is holy ground,
Thy little verse and witty sneer
On thee rebound;
His mind is lifted above thee, too, for
He's sure a bright particular star,
And thou canst not come anear. B.

"Booter"?—EDS.]

A SIMILE.

By Sheridan, woman is compared to the clouds,
Rarely seen singly, but always in crowds;
Their whims and their fancies, their
follies and dreams,
Their moods and their humors, their weepings and screams.

The clouds, you know, forever roam;
Women, too, never stay at home.
The clouds are decked in colors gay;
Look at the women on Easter day.
But if I may speak my humble mind,
I say that women are more like the wind,
Fretful, fickle, ever turning about,
Keeping us always in suspense and doubt.
One never knows what's coming next,
Very much like the wind in this respect.
The wind blows cold and warm from the north and south,

So are the words from a woman's mouth;
The cold bitter blasts arise in the night,
And in killing the flowers seem to delight.
Thus 'tis, too, with woman, who on small
provocation,
'Tis their dearest delight to kill reputation.

The wind, too, is quite apt to change,
This simile, then, will not seem strange;
The women, too, wont get in a passion,
When they try every day to change the
fashion;

A woman too may be fast or slow,
Both these ways the wind doth blow:
Thus on comparison we clearly see,
That in every respect they exactly agree.

The musical clubs of Amherst College are arranging for a European trip during the coming summer. The idea of taking the trip was suggested by the success which attended a tour through the New England summer resorts last year. The party will number about thirty-five members, and concerts will be given in the large cities of England and Scotland. If arrangements are successful, Amherst will be the first college to send its musical club abroad.

The inter-collegiate games will be held at Berkley Oval on Saturday, May 26.

RECEPTION AND BANQUET.

Quite an enjoyable reception and banquet was given by the Sigma Nu Fraternity on Saturday night at Pickard's, in honor of Messrs. Petrikin and Bannon, of Lehigh University. Messrs. Anderson, Burleigh and Bray were also their guests, as were representatives from the other fraternities in college.

The guests met in the parlor at ten o'clock, and after some minutes of general conversation they were marshalled to the banquet hall, where they were welcomed with a few appropriate remarks by Mr. Boyden, the toast-master of the evening.

After the banquet, when the cigars were well aglow, the toast-master announced the following toasts:

"Fraternities," by R. W. Blair, who gave a short sketch of the history of fraternities and prophecies as to their future success.

"The Lehigh Team," by W. R. Robertson, who sympathized with them in their defeat and wished for it again on Monday.

"Athletics," by Charles Baskerville, who gave some well chosen remarks on the bearing of athletics to other phases of life than the purely physical one, predicting the revival of the age of Art and Beauty by this means.

"Our University," by T. B. Lee, introduced as "Killdee" by the toast-master. Bailey deserves to be the poet laureate of the University for his glowing encomiums upon our Alma Mater.

This was the last toast, and after some very pleasant minutes of conversation the guests departed, having to thank their hosts for one of the pleasantest evenings of the year, and regretting that it was not to be gone over with on the next night.

Princeton and University of Pennsylvania will not meet in base-ball this season, owing to the refusal of the Princeton management to agree to Pennsylvania's demand for three games.
