The President's Farewell,

thoughtful man in this audience, if he will think, must know that he has it in his power to sustain that honor and keep it bright or by a thoughtless act to smirch it black as pitch.

It is no light thing to be in fellowship with the past of such an institution as this, to be found with it in all the glories that may come in the future. When you enter here you become all that and are the custodians of its ancient reputation to give the large views, to hate the thing that is common, the thing that is small.

I have a great deal of confidence and belief that the great body here is wholesome and clean and strong and manly, and that if some humors sometimes are discharged, it is just as such things happen from the well body in the physical world. And yet I want you somehow to be a little better than you have ever been while I am gone.

I feel that you have a certain trust put upon you that should cause you to have thoughtfulness in all matters that relate to the name and fame of a great institution.

It will be a great comfort to me to feel that those of you who gather here each morning shall have me in mind as you take part in these simple services of praise and prayer to the great God who holds us in the hollow of his hand.

Wherever I shall go I shall have interest in your concerns, and I shall want you to write to me, some of you, if you will. The first place I shall get mail is in Cairo. I shall hope to display the TAR HEEL in Cairo. I do not think the TAR HEEL will ever have a more thrilling reader even after a great base-ball game than I shall be as I open it in that far land.

I shall want to know first of all that you are doing your work; to know that you are here for, and trying to get to be men. Then I should like to know two things; whether you beat

A Wonderful Invention.

Zoology teaches that the hairs of the head are hollow, and contain an oil that gives them life. In clipping the hair with scissors, this hollow is left open, and the hair loses its life-giving properties.

I have a Machine named the Singeing Machine, which removes the hair and at the same time closes up the hollow, causing the hair to retain its life-giving properties, and therefore stopping the hair from falling out or dying, and giving it a soft growth.

Call and examine this machine and have your hair singed.

Special attention given to dressing Ladies' hair. Cutting done with exquisite and artistic skill by the old University Barber of twenty years' experience.

The singeing machine is highly recommended by scientists throughout the country.

Very Respectfully,
T. D. DUNSTAN,
Professor of Tonsorial Art.

Ga. in debate and Va. in base-ball, and you must find a way to let me know.

Finally, wherever I shall go and whatever I shall see, whether of cities or men, governments or climates or fashions or storied buildings, renowned in history, or great spots because great deeds were done upon them, there shall never fade from my heart or mind some gray old buildings set back among the trees that I loved as a boy, that I love to serve as a man, and some hundreds of boys and men, who, whatever they are, are the best that we have, and the hope and pride of the commonwealth.

Do now our country bless;
But every man knew long ago,
That women loved the press.
